MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Ext'd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—In General.

1. Pawn or pledge defined.—(1) If the thing pawned may be the worse for using, as clothes, etc., the pawnee cannot use them; if it will not be the worse . . . he [the pawnee] may use them, but then it must be at peril. If the pawn is of such a nature that the keeping is a charge to the pawnee, as a cow or horse, the pawnee may milk the one, or ride the other, as this is a recompense for his keeping (HOLT, C.J.).

(2) The pawnee is not answerable for the robbery of things pledged of which he takes proper care (HOLT, C.J.).

(3) If creditor takes a pawn, he is bound to restore it upon the repayment of the debt, but if his care of keeping it be exact, & the pawn is lost, he shall be excused, for there was no default in him (HOLT, C.J.).

(4) Goods in the hands of the pawnee shall not be taken in execution . . . until the money is paid to the pawnee (HOLT, C.J.).

(5) . . . The law requires nothing extraordinary of the pawnee, but only that he shall take what care he can to restore the goods, upon payment of the money (HOLT, C.J.).

(6) There are six sorts of bailment. . . . The fourth sort is, when goods or chattels are delivered to another as a pawn, to be a security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor; & this is called in Latin vadium & in English a pawn or pledge. . . . As to the fourth sort of bailment, viz. vadium or a pawn, in this I shall consider two things: first, what property the pawnee has in the pawn or pledge, & secondly, for what neglect he shall make satisfaction. As to the first, he has a special property, for the pawn is a securing to the pawnee that he shall be repaid his debt & to compel the pawner to pay him (HOLT, C.J.).

(7) If the money for which the goods were pawned be tendered to the pawnee before they are lost, then the pawnee shall be answerable for them (HOLT, C.J.).—COGGS v. BERNARD (1703), 2 Ld. #### SUB-SECT. 1.—NATURE OF CONTRACT.

2. Species of bailment.—COGGS v. BERNARD, No. 1, ante.

3. Distinguished from bailment—Special property in pledgee—Not mere custody.—The difference between bailing & pledging of goods is that a pawnee hath a special property & a bailor custody only.—HARTOP v. HOARE (1743), 3 Atk. 44; 2 Stra. 1187; 1 Wils. 8; 20 E. R. 828.

4. Intermediate between lien & mortgage.—A holder of scrip certificates for shares borrowed of debt. a sum of money on his own promissory note, payable on demand, & on the security of the shares, & deposited with debt. the scrip certificates. He afterwards became bkpt. & debt., without demand & without notice, sold ten of the fifteen shares to repay himself his debt. Creditors' assignee, without making any tender of the amount of the debt, brought an action of trover against debt. to recover the value of the shares:—Held: even assuming the sale to be wrongful, the immediate right to the possession of the shares was not by the sale revested in pltf. & he could not therefore maintain trover, either for the whole value of the shares or for nominal damages.

There are three kinds of security: the first, a simple lien; the second, a mtge., passing the property out & out; the third, a security intermediate between a lien & a mtge.—viz. a pledge—where by contract a deposit of goods is made a security for a debt, & the right to the property vests in the pledgee so far as is necessary to secure the debt (WILLES, J.)—*HALLIDAY v. ##### A. In General.

5. Goods must be in existence.—I assume without discussion that as against Anderson & Colman there has been a pledge as effectual as if they had given it themselves. But, if in such a case there was a shortage, the right of action accruing would be not because there had been, but because there had not been, an effectual pledge of the goods which were wanting. A pledge implies possession, & you cannot either give possession of or pledge things which do not exist (WILLES, J.)—GILBERTSON & Co. v. ANDERSON & COLTMAN, LTD. (1901), 18 T. L. R. 224.

(2) The word “detains” as used in the sect. meant the adverse withholding of possession of the goods from the Govt., & does not bear the technical meaning applied to it in an action of detainee, & therefore it is not necessary to prove that there has been a demand for the goods & a refusal to deliver them up.—*PULLEN v. ### SUB-SECT. 3.—DELIVERY.

A. In General.

8. Necessity for.]—Ordinarily by the common law, although of course a mtge. may be given of chattels as well as of land without delivering possession, yet a mere pledge cannot be given without the delivery of the possession of the goods (MELLISH, L.J.).—*AYERS v. SOUTH AUSTRALIAN

PART II. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.—A.

81. Necessity for.]—The rule that a pledge, unless accompanied or followed by delivery of the goods to the creditor, creates no obligation by which the latter can resort to them in the hands of a third person, is subject to the qualification that where a purchaser obtains pledged articles, with a knowledge that they have been pledged, he has no greater right in regard to the pledged articles than the pledgor himself.—COATON v. ALEXANDER, [1879] Buch. 17.—S. AF.

9. —.]—In a pledge of goods it is not essential that the advance & delivery of possession should be contemporaneous. It is sufficient if possession be delivered within a reasonable time of the advance in pursuance of the contract to pledge.

In Nov. 1883, A. agreed to lend B. £2,500 on the security of a valuable collection of prints & engravings. On Nov. 19, 1883, A. advanced B. £1,250 on account of the loan, & it was arranged between them that the collection should be stored in a certain room, & on Dec. 21, 1883, B. wrote to A.: “The collection was moved in to-day. L. has the key, which I place entirely at your disposal.” On Dec. 24, 1883, A. advanced to B. the balance of the loan, & on Jan. 11, 1884, B. wrote to A.: “You having advanced to me the sum of £2,500, I hereby authorise you to retain possession of my collection of engraved prints, now deposited by me in a certain room . . . the key of which room is at present in your possession or power; & I hereby acknowledge that you are to retain possession of such prints, etc., until the whole of the said sum of £2,500, with interest at 5 per cent., has been repaid to you.” B. died insolvent, & his administratrix disputed the validity of A.'s security on the ground that the letter of Jan. 11 constituted a bill of sale, which was void under Bills of Sale, 1878 (Amendment) Act, 1882 (c. 43):—Held: (1) the transaction was one of pledge, independent of the letters, & Bills of Sale 1878 (Amendment) Act, 1882 (c. 43), did not apply; (2) the pledge was perfected by delivery of the key to L., which amounted to constructive delivery of the goods to A.

The pledge therefore consists in the delivery. At any rate a delivery is an essential part of the pledge (KEKEWICH, J.).—HILTON v. TUCKER (1888), 39 Ch. D. 609; 57 L. J. Ch. 973; 59 L. T. 172; 36 W. R. 762; 4 T. L. R. 618.

10. —Actual or constructive delivery.]—(1) Pltf., being indebted to one B. in the sum of £40, entered into a written agreement with him, whereby he agreed that B. should have his horse, van, cart, & two sets of harness, “for what he owed him”; & by the memorandum it was further agreed that B. should keep the articles mentioned until pltf. paid him the £40: & the memorandum concluded thus—“The said B. has received into his possession the said horse, van, cart, & two sets of harness this Dec. 24, 1860.” B. received into his actual possession the horse & van & one set of harness, but having no place to put them in, he left the cart & the other set of harness with pltf., with an understanding that he was to take them whenever he pleased. B. having become insolvent, pltf. got back the horse, van, & set of harness: but B.'s assignee seized the whole of the things mentioned in the memorandum, & delivery.]—To complete an underhand pledge of movables, delivery thereof to the pledgee is necessary. But, where a pledgee has already possession of the movables of the pledgor in some other capacity, no actual delivery of the movables is necessary to create a valid pledge, provided there be clear caused them to be sold by debt., an auctioneer :—Held: that being the only question raised at the trial, there had been a sufficient delivery of the goods to B. to vest the property in him, subject to the right of the pawnee to redeem; & consequently, pltf. was not entitled to recover.

(2) Qu.: as to the right of a pawnee to sell the pledge, where no day has been fixed for the payment of the sum for which the chattel is impignorated?

Now, I take the law to be, that, to constitute a valid pledge, there must be a delivery of the article either actual or constructive to the pawnee (ERLE, C.J.).—MARTIN v. REID (1862), 11 C. B. N. S. 730; 31 L. J. C. P. 126; 5 L. T. 727; 142 E. R. 982.

12. Effect of delivery—Property of pawnee in pledge.]—Pawnees of goods, etc., permitting bkpt. to continue in possession, order, & disposition, have no specific lien against general assignees under the commission.

There is one case more, where the proper distinction between mtge. & pawns is taken, Ratcliff v. Davis, No. 75, post, where the ct. held that there was a special property in pawnee, entitling to the custody till the condition is performed; but that on payment the whole property vested in pawner; distinguishing it from a mtge. which is a conveyance of the thing (BURNET, J.).—*RYALL v. ### B. Sufficiency of Delivery.

13. Constructive delivery—Goods remaining in pawner's possession.]—W., the captain of a ship of which debts. were the owners, delivered a chronometer to debts., as security for an advance of money, under a written agreement that the instrument was to be considered the property of debts. until the money was repaid, they allowing him the use of it during the voyage about to be undertaken. Upon the completion of the voyage, W. pledged it again to pltf., the chronometer then being in the hands of the makers, who, in ignorance of the former pledge, agreed to hold the instrument for pltf. The sum advanced by debts. not being paid :—

Held: (1) the property in the chattel vested in debts. by the first pledge, & nothing remained in the pawner, but a reversionary interest in the chattel, until the money was paid; (2) debts.' right was not affected by fraud, to be inferred necessarily from the want of possession, as the want of possession is but a ground of fraud to be submitted to the jury. Neither did debts. lose their property in the pledge, by parting with the possession, for though, generally speaking, in the case of a simple pawn of a personal chattel, the property is lost with the possession, yet, the delivery to the pawner, under the terms of the agreement, was not a parting with the possession, & in such case, the possession of the pawner was that of debts.—REEVES v. CAPPER (1838), 5 Bing. N. C. 136; 1 Arn. 427; 6 Scott, 877; 8 L. J. C. P. 44; 2 Jur. 1067; 132 E. R. 1057.

15. ——— Shipment of goods in boat of pawnee—Boat receipt for delivery of goods to pawnee.]—Where a merchant, in Newcastle, who was in the habit of consigning goods to his agents, *pltf.*s, in London, for sale, & of drawing upon them to certain amounts, had overdrawn his account, & advised his agents that he would ship them twenty tons of alkali to cover his draft, did accordingly ship the alkali on board a ship of debts., who were wharfingers between Newcastle & London, & received from debts.' servant, the captain of the ship, a boat receipt, to the effect that the goods were to be delivered to *pltf.*s:—Held: (1) debts. were estopped from denying *pltf.*s' title in the goods upon their arrival in London; (2) no bill of lading was requisite to vest the property in *pltf.*s; (3) as between A. & *pltf.*s, the relation was not that of principal & factor, but of pawner & pawnee, in which case the property would vest in the pawnee without actual delivery, in the same manner as in that of vendor & vendee.—*EVANS v. ### PART II. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.—B.

13.1. Constructive delivery—Goods remaining in pawner's possession.]—An insolvent executed a so-called "deed of sale," whereby he purported to sell certain goods to his father for the amount of a debt due to the father, & the latter agreed that the sale should be considered as cancelled upon payment of the debt. Upon the execution of the deed of sale the goods were delivered to the father, but were afterwards allowed to remain in possession of the son as his own property:—Held: the transaction amounted to a pledge, & not a sale.—HORMEYER v. Gous (1891), 10 S. C. 115.—S. AF.

Sect. 1.—The contract of pawn: Sub-sect. 3, B.; sub-sect. 4.]

16. — Goods left in possession of vendor—To secure purchase-money.]—Teas are sold to be paid for at appointed days, the sales being made according to the custom of the trade, whereby the goods, when sold, are left as a pledge for full payment with the vendor, who, in case of non-payment, is at liberty to resell & charge the loss to the original purchaser. The purchase-money is not paid at the appointed time; the purchaser becomes bkpt.; & the vendor having sold part of the teas before the flat, & the rest afterwards, gives the estate credit for the clear proceeds of the sales, tendering a proof for the residue of the original purchase-money:—Held: although there was no delivery of the goods, the original sale was a binding contract within Stat. Frauds.—Re TATE, Ex p. MOFFATT (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 170.

17. — — — — —.]—It is not disputed that if a vendor who has sold goods should, after the sale has been completed, agree with the vendee to retain the physical possession of the goods, but on such terms that the nature & character of his former possession is changed from that of owner to that of bailee for the purchaser, that transaction will amount to an acceptance & actual receipt of the goods within Stat. Frauds, s. 17, & necessarily to a good constructive delivery sufficient to create a pledge (LORD ATKINSON).—DUBLIN CITY DISTILLERY, LTD. v. DOHERTY, [1914] A. C. 823; 83 L. J. P. C. 265; 111 L. Goods warehoused with third person—Transfer of bill of lading.]—Goods shipped from India having been landed & warehoused at a bonded sufferance wharf in London, were under a stop put upon them by the master for freight:—Held: the transfer of the bill of lading operated as a transfer of the goods, so as to constitute a valid pledge of them for an advance, without the necessity of the pledgees getting actual possession of them, because the bill of lading remained in full force so long as complete delivery of the goods had not been made to some person claiming under it.—*BARBER v. 19. — — — — — Request note ordering delivery on payment of charges.]—Goods imported from England into Quebec, consigned to M. & S., & stored in the Customs' warehouse there, according to the Customs' regulations, for freight, duties, & storage, were, by a contract in writing, pledged by

M. & S. for advances made to them by G. & K., & a note of such pledge entered in the book of the Chief Officer of the Customs, specifying the conditions on which the loan was made, with a request to such officer to hold the goods subject to the orders of G. & K., they paying the duty & storage charges before removal. L., creditor of M. & S., obtained judgment in an action against them, & under a fi. fa., seized the goods so in bond, the execution of which was opposed by G. & K., who made an application main levée to the ct., on the ground that by the above contract the property of M. & S. in the goods in question was conveyed to them to secure repayment of the advances made by them:—Held: the circumstances of the case & the dealings of the parties constituted a constructive delivery, & the judgment which dismissed the opposition of G. & K., & gave effect to the seizure under the execution to their prejudice as pledgees, could not be supported.—YOUNG v. LAMBERT (1870), L. R. 3 P. C. 142; 6 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 406; 39 L. J. P. C. 21; 22 L. T. 499; 18 W. R. 497; 3 Mar. L. C. 412; 16 E. R. 779, P. C.

20. — — — — — Delivery order ordering delivery to pawnee.]—Pltf. applied verbally to defts. for a loan, offering as security certain furniture of his then at a warehouse in his name. Defts. made the loan to pltf., who gave them a promissory note for the amount, & also signed a memorandum by which he agreed to pay interest on the amount of the note if not paid by the stipulated time. On the same day pltf. signed & handed to the warehouseman a delivery order, requesting him to "deliver to defts. or their order" all property warehoused with you in my name on payment of your charges":—Held: the delivery order was not a "bill of sale" within the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 (c. 31), & 1882 (c. 43), the whole transaction being one of pledge, & the effect of the delivery order being equivalent to actual possession by defts., the pledgees.—*GRIGG v. The terms of the transaction were recorded in two letters written by deft. co. to pltf., one letter written before the keys were handed over, & the second letter subsequently. The last letter contained the words: "The goods to be locked up, the keys in your possession, & you to have the right to remove same as desired." The co. went into liquidation & the liquidator claimed that the transaction was

25 i. — — — — — Delivery of key of place of deposit of goods—To pawnee.]—E. pledged certain goods in a store, hired by him, to pltf., who was present when the goods were placed in the store & there received the key of the same from E. Subsequently E. obtained advances from deft. S., & fraudulently purported to pledge the same goods to S., to whom he gave a duplicate key of the store. S. obtained an assignment of the lease, but afterwards removed the goods to another store:—Held: there had been a valid delivery of the goods to pltf., & he was not deprived of his rights as a pledgee by reason of the subsequent fraudulent conduct of the pledgor & removal of the goods by S.—HEYDENRYCH v. SABER (1900), 17 S. C. 73.—S. A. F.

invalid under Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 93 (1) (c), as being a charge created or evidenced by an instrument which if executed by an individual would require registration as a bill of sale. Pltf. brought an action claiming a declaration that the goods were in his possession, & that he was entitled to remove them:—Held: possession of the goods passed to pltf. by the delivery of the keys of the rooms in which they were locked up, notwithstanding that those rooms were on defts.' premises, inasmuch as defts. had conferred upon pltf. a licence to make the necessary entry in order to use the keys, which licence could not be revoked, & therefore the transaction was valid as against the liquidator & pltf. was entitled to remove the goods.—*WRIGHTSON v. 25. Actual delivery—For purpose of valuation & offer of loan—Pledge completed later.—On Nov. 1, 1919, pltf. handed her jewellery to M. to value it & let her know what offer he could make as to lending her money; he was to keep the jewellery as security if he made the advance. On the same day M. pledged the jewellery with deft., a pawnbroker, who in good faith agreed to advance £1,000 on it, the transaction being completed on Nov. 3. On Nov. 5 it was arranged between pltf. & M. that he should lend her £500, & that she should give him her promissory note for £600 payable in six equal monthly instalments, & that he should retain possession of her jewellery as security for the payment of the promissory note. On Dec. 8, M. borrowed £300 from one B., & deposited with him as security pltf.'s promissory note & deft.'s counterfoil deposit note. B. gave notice to pltf. of the deposit of the promissory note & required that payments under it should be made to him. On Dec. 16 M. died. Pltf. paid B. sums amounting to £400 on account of the sum due on the promissory note, the payments being made with notice of deft.'s position & claim. Pltf. made no tender to deft., & claimed the return of her jewellery:—Held: there was on Nov. 1 a delivery of possession of the jewellery to M., which was a good delivery for the purpose of creating a pledge whenever that pledge should be created, the pledge being completed on Nov. 5; & the character of the delivery was not affected by the act of M. in pledging the jewellery to deft. on Nov. 3; pltf. having made no tender to deft. was not entitled to recover the jewellery.—BLUNDELL-LEIGH v. ATTENBOROUGH, [1921] 3 K. B. 235; 90 L. J. K. B. 1005; 125 L. T. 356; 37 T. L. R. 567; 65 Sol. Jo. 474, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 4.—EXTINCTION OF THE CONTRACT.

26. What amounts to extinction—Repossession gained by fraud.—Deft. employed a stock broker to obtain a loan on the security of bonds, which were transferable by delivery. The broker, accordingly, borrowed a sum from pltf., but he wrongfully applied a part to his own use. The broker was unable to redeem the bonds, & deft. with knowledge of the circumstances, promised & agreed to call & give the broker his cheque for the deficiency on receiving back the bonds. The broker, acting on the faith of this promise, gave a crossed cheque to pltf., & redeemed the bonds. On the same day deft., by a trick, obtained possession of the bonds, without giving his cheque; & the broker's crossed cheque was consequently returned, & he became a defaulter:—Held: deft. was responsible to pltf. for the fraud, & the bonds in his hands were still liable to repay pltf. his debt.—MOCATTA v. BELL (1857), 24 Beav. 585; 27 L. J. Ch. 237; 30 L. T. O. S. 239; 4 Jur. N. S. 77; 53 E. R. 483.

27. ——— Repledged with bonâ fide holder for value.—D. & co. deposited certain goods with pltf. as security for an advance: they afterwards obtained possession of the goods by fraudulently representing to pltf. that they had sold them to defts., & would hand over to pltf. the money to be received in payment. D. & co. obtained an advance from defts., & deposited the goods, with a power of sale, with them:—Held: as pltf. had parted with their special property in the goods to D. & co., they could not recover them in an action from defts. who had obtained them bonâ fide & for a good consideration.—BABCOCK v. LAWSON (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 234, 49 L. J. Q. B. 408; 42 L. T. 289; 28 W. R. 591, C. A.

30. ——— Goods restored for special purpose—Return of bill of lading for sale of the goods.—

The law of Scotland as well as the law of England is that a pledgee may redeliver the goods to the pledgor for a limited purpose without thereby losing his rights under the contract of pledge.

The pledgors of a bill of lading representing a specific cargo were under contract to sell a larger quantity of like goods to third parties. The pledgees returned the bill of lading to the pledgors to obtain delivery of the merchandise & sell on the pledgees' behalf, & account for the proceeds towards satisfaction of the debt:—Held: the pledgees' security was not affected, & they were entitled to the proceeds of the cargo as against the diligence of general creditors of the pledgors.—NORTH WESTERN BANK v. POYNTER, SON & MACDONALDS, [1895] A. C. 56; 64 L. J. P. C. 27; 72 L. T. 93; 11 R. 125, H. L.

31. ———.]—A limited co. pledged bills of lading with a bank to secure an overdraft. When it was time to sell the goods, the co. in accordance with the well-established mercantile practice obtained the bills of lading from the bank for realisation on the terms stated in the usual letter of trust given by the co. to the bank, to wit that the co. received the bills of lading in trust on the bank's account & undertook to hold the goods when received & the proceeds when sold as the bank's trustees & to remit the entire net proceeds as realised:—Held: as the letter of trust merely recorded the terms on which the co. was authorised to realise the goods on the bank's behalf, & did not really create any charge at all, it did not require registration under Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 93 (1) (c), (e), either as a bill of sale within clause (c) or a charge on book debts within clause (e).—Re ALLESTER (DAVID), LTD., [1922] 2 Ch. 211; 91 L. 37. —.]—Upon its coming to the knowledge of applts. that a sewing machine belonging to them had, without their knowledge or consent, been pledged by S., to whom they had let it on hire, or by some one with or without S.'s consent, with resp., a pawnbroker, for a sum under 40s., they served resp. with notice informing him that the machine was their property, & demanding redelivery thereof to them. Resp. refused to comply with this notice, on the ground that it was invalid, as not being in conformity with Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), & subsequently delivered the pledge to a person producing the pawn ticket relating thereto, on payment of the loan & profit, but gave no notice to applts. of having done so. In an action subsequently brought by applts. against resp. for an unlawful conversion of their property:—Held: (1) the applts., as true owners of an article pledged without their knowledge or consent, were entitled, in exercise of their common law right, to recover it or its value from the pawnbroker by action, notwithstanding that the latter had returned it to the pawner or person holding the ticket who had redeemed it, their common law right so to do not having been taken away by Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 29; (2) Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 25, justifies the pawnbroker only to this extent, viz., in treating the holder of a pawn ticket as the person lawfully entitled to hold it; & the indemnity given by Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 25, is limited to & protects the pawnbroker only against the pawner, the owner who has authorised the pledging, & all those who claim title under them; & none of the provisions of Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), were intended to, nor do they, affect the common law right of an owner of property pledged against his will who claims by title paramount to that of the pawner. —*SINGER MANUFACTURING CO. v. 42. — — — — ——COGGS v. BERNARD, No. 1, ante.

43. — — — — ——(1) There is a great difference in this respect between a pledge & a lien. The authorities are clear that a right of lien, properly so called, is a mere personal right of detention; & that an unauthorised transfer of the thing does not transfer that personal right (BLACKBURN, J.).

(2) Till possession is given the intended pledgee has only a right of action on the contract, & no interest in the thing itself (BLACKBURN, J.).

(3) In general all that the pledgor requires is the personal contract of the pledgee that on bringing the money the pawn shall be given up to him, & that in the meantime the pledgee shall be responsible for due care being taken for its safe custody. This may very well be done though there has been a sub-pledge (BLACKBURN, J.).

(4) The assignment of the pawn for the purpose of raising money, so long at least as it purports to transfer no more than the pledgee's interest against the pledgor, is so far from being found in practice to be inconsistent with or repugnant to the contract, that it has been introduced into the Factors Acts (BLACKBURN, J.).

(5) I am of opinion that the transfer of the pledge does not put an end to the contract, but amounts only to a breach of contract, upon which the owner may bring an action, for nominal damages if he has sustained no substantial damage; for substantial damages, if the thing pledged is damaged in the hands of the third party, or the owner is prejudiced by delay in not having the thing delivered to him on tendering the amount for which it was pledged (COCKBURN, C.J.). — DONALD v. SUCKLING (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 585; 7 B. & S. 783; 35 L. J. Q. B. 232; 14 L. T. 772; 30 J. P. 565; 12 Jur. N. S. 795; 15 W. R. 13.

44. — — — — ——On Sept. 14, 1900, A. & co. pledged chattels with B. as security for a loan to be repaid on Oct. 26 following; & on Sept. 27 they pledged other chattels with B. as security for a further loan to be repaid on Nov. 11 following. On Oct. 26 B. delivered the chattels first pledged to C., who produced a written authority from A. & co. as purchaser, & paid him off; & on Nov. 11 C. came again to B. with a written authority from A. & co. as purchaser of the chattels under the second pledge, & by arrangement with B. extended the date of redemption to Jan. 11, 1901, when he paid off B. & took delivery of the chattels. B. acted in good faith, but when paid on Oct. 26 had notice of an available act of bkpcy. committed by A. & co. on the previous Oct. 6; & when paid on Jan. 11 knew that a receiving order had been made against A. & co. on Jan. 9. C. was in collusion with A. & co., & was fraudulent in all that he did: he sold the chattels & disposed of the proceeds. The title of the trustee in bkpcy. related back to the act of bkpcy. committed on the previous Oct. 6, & he claimed from B. the value of the pledged chattels less the loans:—Held: B. was not liable, for that, although not protected by Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 49, he was bound by his contract to deliver up the chattels when tendered on the date of redemption

I am of opinion the act Lord L. did amounted not to an alienation. The diamond necklace was pledged as a collateral security for £1,000 borrowed by Lord L., of Mr. M., & a bond given at the same time, which shows it was intended as a personal security from himself; a power likewise was given to Mr. M., whilst Lord L. was out of England, to sell the necklace for £1,500. This does not amount to a sale, but only a necessary power in order to reimburse Mr. M., when sold, his principal & interest. But it was not sold, & therefore at his death stood only as a pledge (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—GRAHAM v. LONDON-DERRY (1746), 3 Atk. 393; 26 E. R. 1026, L. C.

Pltf., without authority from the fourth partner, tendered to debt. the amount for which the goods were a security, & demanded the whole of the goods. Debt. refused to deliver the goods to pltf. :—Held: the refusal by debt. was not such a conversion of the goods as would entitle pltf. to maintain an action of trover against debt.

On July 24, goods were pledged with deft., a pawnbroker, in the name of Mary Warne, & the duplicate was made out accordingly, she was, in fact, the wife of pltf. Vaughan, but it did not appear that this fact was then known to deft. A few days afterwards, the same person applied to deft. for a copy of the duplicate, & a form of declaration of the loss of it, pursuant to 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 16, & Statutory Declarations Act, 1835 (c. 62), s. 12. On Aug. 6 pltf. produced the duplicate to deft., & demanded the goods, tendering the money advanced on them & the interest, but deft. refused to deliver them, on the ground of the declaration having been obtained. Pltf. applied to a magistrate to compel him, & deft. then, on Aug. 9, learnt that the party who pledged the goods was pltf.'s wife :—Held : upon these facts, the judge at the trial was wrong in directing the jury that the detention of the goods was in point of law a conversion, & he ought to have left it to them to say whether deft. had a bona fide doubt as to the title to the goods, & if so, whether a reasonable time for that doubt to be cleared up, by the party's going before a magistrate & verifying the declaration, pursuant to 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 16, & elapsed on Aug. 6, & if it had, the refusal then to deliver them to pltf. amounted to a conversion.—VAUGHAN v. WATT (1840), 6 M. & W. 492; 9 L. 67. — — — — — Stolen goods.]—Pltf.'s watch, which had been bought some years previously at deft.'s shop, was stolen from pltf., who gave information of the theft to deft. The watch was pledged with a pawnbroker, & eventually, together with a large number of other unredeemed pledges, was sold by auction in a room on the first floor of a building in the city of London, which room was used solely for the sale by auction of the goods of third persons. Shortly afterwards the watch was purchased in a jeweller's shop in the country by one B., who sent it to deft. for an opinion as to whether it was a genuine antique watch. Deft. wrote both to pltf. & to B., telling them that it was the watch which had been stolen, & inquiring as to their wishes in the matter. No answer was sent by pltf. to deft.'s letter, but a few days afterwards a clerk of pltf.'s solrs. called at deft.'s shop &, on being shown the watch, demanded that it should be then & there handed over to him, & on this request being refused, at once served deft. with a writ in detinue which he had taken out on behalf of pltf. about two hours previously :—Held : upon the facts given in evidence there had been no wrongful refusal on the part of deft. to return the watch to pltf. before the date of the issue of the writ, & pltf. had no cause of action against deft. either in detinue or in trover.—CLAYTON v. LE ROY, [1911] 2 K. ### SUB-SECT. 1.—POSSESSION AND PROPERTY.

75. Right of possession in pawnee—Till repayment.]—(1) If goods be pawned, & no particular day of redemption agreed, the owner may redeem them at any time.

(2) The delivery of goods pledged by the wife of a pawnee to a stranger, passes no interest in them, though done with her husband's consent.

(3) Tender of the money to the extrix. of a pawnee, & her refusal to restore the goods, revests them in the owner.

(4) If one do pawn, or mortgage goods, & a time certain is limited for the redeeming of them, there the death of any of the parties, shall not be prejudicial, the one way or the other (CROKE, J.).

(5) He which pawns goods, & no time appointed for the redemption, he hath liberty during his life, to tender & redeem them, & the death of the party to whom, shall not hinder the redemption, but if the party himself which pawned the goods dies before redemption, his exor. cannot redeem, & so the time of redemption is not determined by the death of him to whom the goods were pawned, but by the death of him which pawned the goods (YELVETON, J.).

(6) He to whom goods are pledged, hath a special property in them until the money be paid, & he which pawns the goods hath the general property in them; he to whom they were pawned hath a property to detain them until the money be paid, but without all question, the general property remains in him which pawned the goods, & he is not to lose this his property by the death of the other, but that he may well redoem the same (FLEMING, C.J.).

(7) If the pawn be of a perishable nature, as corn, oil, etc., & no time of redemption limited, & the party stays till it is perished in nature & spoilt forasmuch as there is no default in him who took the pledge. he shall have debt for his money & the other no remedy for his pawn, for the law of this part hath dissolved the contract; for things in their nature perishable cannot be preserved (FLEMING, C.J.).—RATCLIFF v. 88. ———.]—The very expression "special property" seems to exclude the notion of that general property which is the badge of ownership. If the pledgee sells he does so by virtue & to the extent of the pledgor's ownership, & not with a new title of his own. He must appropriate the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the pledgor's debt, for the money resulting from the sale is the pledgor's money to be so applied. The pledgee must account to the pledgor for any surplus after paying the debt. He must take care that the sale is a provident sale, & if the goods are in bulk he must not sell more than is reasonably sufficient to pay off the debt, for he only holds possession for the purpose of securing himself the advance which he has made. He cannot use the goods as his own. These considerations show that the right of sale is exercisable by virtue of an implied authority from the pledgor & for the benefit of both parties. It creates no jus in re in favour of the pledgee; it gives him no more than a jus in rem such as a lienholder possesses, but with this added incident, that he can sell the property motu proprio & without any assistance from the ct. Thereupon a Japanese bank, which, at the time of shipment had made advances in respect of which the shippers were in default, exercised, as indorsees & holders of the bill of lading, their power of sale, by entering into a contract to sell the goods to a British firm. On the seizure of the tallow by the Customs authorities as prize:—Held: the goods must be released to the purchasers, for, when the contract of sale was made, the enemy pledgors lost their right to redeem, & thereby ceased to be owners. In 1920 the firm sold the rubber shares without the knowledge or authority of deft., who was kept in ignorance of the sale till after the bkpcy. of the firm.

In both cts. below this transaction has been spoken of as an equitable mtge. In practice & I think in a good many decisions, very similar, if not identical, transactions have been spoken of as pledges. I express no opinion upon the question, which this deposit of security really was, because it appears to me that on either view the inability of the mtgee., or the pledgee, as the case may be, to return the security against payment of the debt equally constituted a defence to the debtor under the circumstances (LORD SUMNER).—ELLIS & CO.'S TRUSTEE v. 137. —.] — In an action for wrongfully depriving *pltf.*s. of goods, it appeared that the goods had been consigned to England from a colony. The bills of lading provided that the goods were to be delivered to the order of the consignor or his assigns. The consignor drew bills of exchange on the consignee against the consignment, & sold the bills of exchange, with the bills of lading annexed, which he had indorsed in blank, to a colonial bank, who sent them to a bank in London, with a hypothecation note empowering the London bank to sell the goods if the bills of exchange were not accepted or not paid at maturity. The goods arrived in England, & were delivered to defts., who were a railway co., to be delivered to the order of the shipowners. The consignee paid the freight & other shipping charges & accepted the bills of exchange, but before the bills became due, he induced defts. wrongfully to deliver the goods to him without producing a delivery order from the shipowners. When the bills became due the consignee requested *pltf.*s. to advance the money & take up the bills. They did so, & received the bills of exchange & the bills of lading from the London bank, & ultimately obtained delivery orders from the shipowners in exchange for the bills of lading. When they presented the delivery orders to defts. they found that the goods had been already given up to the consignee, & they thereupon commenced the present action:—Held: (1) *pltf.*s. must be taken to be pledgees of the goods, & had therefore a property sufficient to entitle them to maintain the action independently of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 1; (2) *pltf.*s.' right of action was not affected by the fact that at the date of the wrongful delivery they had not acquired their title to the goods.—*BRISTOL & WEST OF ENGLAND BANK v. 146. — — — — —.]—In Apr. 1853, J. & Co., brokers, sold for pltf's., manufacturing chemists, two tons of tartaric acid, to be delivered in Nov. In Oct. 1853, G. & Co., brokers, sold for pltf's. two tons of tartaric acid, to be also delivered in Nov. J. & Co. & G. & Co. respectively sent to pltf's. sold notes, not disclosing any principal. In Nov., a clerk of one Anderson, a merchant, left at pltf's. counting house two delivery orders. One was from J. & Co., for delivery to T. Broomhall or order of one of the tons of acid; this order was indorsed by T. Broomhall, "Deliver to my order." The other delivery order was from G. & Co., for delivery to T. Broomhall or order of the two tons of acid; this order was indorsed, "T. Broomhall—Deliver to W. Leask: J. Ellis—Deliver at Custom House Quay to my sub-order. W. Leask." Anderson induced Leask to purchase from Ellis the acid for him, upon a false representation that he was acting on behalf of V. N. & Co. Ellis thereupon gave to Leask the delivery orders which he had received from Broomhall. Leask indorsed the orders specially deliverable to himself, & delivered them to Anderson for the purpose of enabling him to inspect the acid. On Nov. 28, Anderson went to pltf's. & stated that he had purchased from Leask the acid mentioned in the delivery orders, & he requested pltf's. to deliver it at the Custom House Quay for him. On the faith of this statement, pltf's. gave Anderson a delivery order & the acid was transferred into his name. Anderson then obtained warrants & pledged the acid with deft. for a bond fide advance:—Held: the relation of vendor & vendee did not subsist between pltf's. & Anderson, neither did the property in the acid pass to Anderson; & mere possession, with no further indicia of title than the delivery orders was not sufficient to entitle deft., though a bond fide pawnee, to resist the claim

147. — — — — —.]—(1) A warehouse keeper who has goods deposited with him as such is not "an agent entrusted with the possession" of them, within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, although he be also a broker, & is usually employed to sell the goods, but always upon specific instructions for that purpose received from the principal.

S. carried on the business of a sheep's wool broker in Liverpool, & also that of a warehouse keeper. In his capacity of warehouse keeper he was in the habit of receiving from pltf's. merchants in London, bills of lading for sheeps' wool & goats' wool to arrive in Liverpool, which when landed was deposited in his warehouses, under directions to send pltf's. a report & valuation, but he was not authorised to sell without specific instructions. The sheeps' wool so deposited with him was usually sold by S., & the proceeds received by him for pltf's. The goats' wool S. never sold, he not being a goats' wool broker. Having wools of pltf's. of both descriptions in his warehouse, but not having received any instructions as to the sale of either, S. professed to pledge the whole with defts., bankers in Liverpool, by a letter in which he undertook to hold them as trustee for defts., to secure the sum advanced:—Held: S. was not, as to any of the wools so agreed to be pledged, "an agent entrusted with the possession," within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39.

The intention of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, was, that, where a third person has entrusted goods or the documents of title to goods to an agent who in the course of such agency sells or pledges them, he should be deemed by that act to have misled any one who bond fide deals with the agent, & makes a purchase from or an advance to him without notice that he was not authorised to sell the goods or to procure the advance (BLACKBURN, J.).

(2) The statute [5 & 6 Vict. c. 39] was meant to apply to those cases where one person has given an apparent authority to another, & a third person has dealt with that other in the belief that the authority really existed (BRAMWELL, B.).

(3) At common law a person in possession of goods could not confer on another, either by sale or by pledge any better title to the goods than he himself had (BLACKBURN, J.).—COLE v. NORTH WESTERN BANK (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 354; 44 L. J. C. P. 233; 32 L. T. 733, Ex. Ch.

150. Right of action.]—A. & B. having, by their brokers, purchased cottons, warrants or orders for delivery were made out in the name of the brokers, & the cottons were left in their possession, as the brokers of A. Immediately after the purchase B. paid A. one-half the value. When considerable purchases had been made, the brokers were informed that B. had an interest in the goods purchased, & upon directions from A. & B., divided the goods held on their joint account, by appropriating specific warrants to each party: A. after this, directed the brokers to procure him a loan on the security of the warrants, & C. advanced money by discounting bills drawn by A. upon the brokers; as a security for which, the whole of the warrants were deposited with C. by the brokers. Before the bills became due, the brokers were directed by A. to get one-half renewed. C. having discounted fresh bills for this purpose, the brokers who had obtained the warrants from C. for the purpose of dividing them & returning him one-half, left in the hands of C., as a security, the warrants belonging to B., C. not knowing that B. had any interest in them:—Held: B. might recover from C. in respect of the goods thus pledged to him by A.

R. P., however, pledged them with defts. for a certain sum advanced to him by them. R. P. having absconded, pltf. authorised an agent to demand the sugars from defts., but they proceeded to sell them; & the proceeds were also demanded after the sale by the agent, with the authority of pltf.:—Held: (1) pltf. had a sufficient title in the sugars to maintain trover, although it was insisted that the right of possession was in J. G.; (2) no demand by pltf. was necessary, as R. P., had no authority to pledge the sugars to defts.; (3) the demand of the proceeds after the sale not having been complied with, the proper remedy was by an action of trover, & not for money had & received.—SELLECK v. Replication that at the time of taking the bill from R., deft. knew he had not authority to pledge it:—Held: sufficient.—HILTON v. SWAN (1839), 5 Bing. N. 159. ——— Securities deposited by solicitor.]—On Sept. 29, 1904, pltf. was a customer of the Union Bank of London, where she had a current account & a loan account. On the loan account £1,900 was advanced, & there were certain securities deposited to secure that amount. Pltf., being anxious to change her account for family reasons, consulted her solr., C., who had acted for her for many years. As a result, C. informed pltf. that he had arranged with deft. bank to grant the loan on the same terms as she had with the Union Bank of London, & asked her to sign certain documents in connection with the transaction. The material document was on the common printed form of deft. bank & was as follows: "At the request of Messrs. Rose Innes, Son, & Crick I have transferred or caused to be transferred . . ."—then the shares were mentioned & the names of the manager & sub-manager of deft. bank—"or their nominees as trustees for you to be held as collateral security for your advance to Rose Innes, Son, & Crick." With this document C. went to deft. bank after the securities were transferred, obtained an addition to the loan of £1,900, & effected the transfer of their securities in such a way as to make them available to secure his general indebtedness to deft. bank, which amounted to some £16,000 which he had from time to time obtained upon other securities. In 1911 pltf. required the return of her securities from C., which he promised to do, but they were never in fact returned, as C. absconded. In these circumstances pltf. brought this action to have her securities delivered to her by deft. bank subject to her paying the £1,900 which she admitted having received. It appeared that the general nature of the transactions between C. & deft. bank were that advances were made by deft. bank to C. upon securities which belonged to third parties who were clients of C. in the ordinary sense, & that this was known to deft. bank, though in a number of cases it might be that the clients were clients in respect of a mere financial business carried on by C. independent of his solr.'s business. It was contended for pltf. (inter alia) that deft. bank had such notice of the fiduciary relationship of C. to pltf. as to prevent their acting on the document:—Held: there was here sufficient notice of the relationship existing or that probably existed between pltf. & C. to have put deft. bank upon inquiry, & accordingly they could not claim to be in a better position than they would have been if they had made inquiries, & therefore pltf. was entitled to redeem the securities upon payment of £1,900.—JAMESON v. UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND (1913), 109 L. T. 850.

160. ——— Pawnee holder without notice—Negotiable securities.]—Re CLAUGHTON, Ex p. BRITTEN, No. 145, ante.

161. ——— Securities deposited with bank.]—B.'s brokers held bonds & stocks of his as security for advances. The securities comprised, first, bonds payable to bearer; secondly, securities transferable by written instrument & registration. The brokers deposited the securities with the deft. bank as security for larger advances made to the brokers by the bank. The registered securities had been transferred to & registered in the names of trustees for the bank, in some cases the transfers being executed by B. for a nominal consideration, & in other cases by the brokers or other persons for full value expressed. The securities had been so deposited, together with securities of other persons, to secure an entire sum. B. admitted that the brokers had authority from him to transfer the benefit of their own security to the extent of their advances to him, but claimed to redeem on payment to the bank of what was due from him to the brokers. It was proved that by far the greater part of the business of the Stock Exchange is on the system called "contango." The bank contended that they were entitled to assume, & did assume, without enquiry, that all the securities were the property of the brokers. B. died before trial, & the action was continued by his exors.:—Held: (1) as to the registered securities, the onus lay upon pltf. to prove that the brokers had exceeded the authority given to them by B., & as they had not produced evidence to displace the legal title of the bank, the action must fail on that ground alone; (2) considering the prevalence of "contango" transactions, the bank were entitled to assume that the securities pledged to them were the property of the brokers; as regards the securities transferred to the bank trustees by B. himself, pltf. were estopped from denying the title of the bank.—*BENTINCK v. 164. Evidence of want of authority—High rate of interest.]—Where a mercantile agent in the jewellery trade raises money by pledging goods with a pawnbroker, he is not acting beyond the ordinary course of his business. Regard must be had to the actual disposition of the goods & not the circumstances attending such disposition when considering whether a particular transaction is within the ordinary course of the mercantile agent's business.

A pledge at an unusual rate of interest could be evidence from which an inference may be drawn that the pledgee had notice that the pledgor had no authority to make the pledge.—JANESICH v. ATTENBOROUGH (GEORGE) & SON (1910), 102 L. T. 605; 26 T. L. R. 278.

166. —[Where the owner of goods suffers another to have possession of them, or of the documents which are the evidence of property therein, on a sale to him, obtained by means of fraudulent representation, & avoidable at the option of the owner, a sale or pledge by such party, before the owner has exercised his option, & without notice to the subsequent purchaser, is binding; but this is not so when a party has merely obtained the goods by means of false pretences, without any contract of sale to himself; as when he falsely & fraudulently represents that another person has authorised him to purchase the goods. In such case, the original owner can recover the goods from a party to whom they have been sold or pledged by the person who fraudulently obtained them, before any notice of the fraud, or any disaffirmance of the transaction by the real owner.—*HIGGONS v. 167. —[S. was the agent of L., a wine merchant in Spain, & was induced by the fraudulent representations of three persons acting in collusion to enter into separate contracts with them for the sale of wine. S. transmitted the orders for the wine to L., who shipped the wines, & sent the bills of lading to S.: the bills of lading were handed by S. to the three persons respectively on account of the contracts entered into with them. The wine so obtained was deposited with depts., a dock co., who issued warrants for the same; some of the wine therein mentioned was made deliverable to the order of one of the three persons, & the rest to the order of another of them. The warrants were then pledged with pltfs. to secure advances. L. afterwards served notice upon depts. not to part with the wine; thereupon depts. refused to give up the wine when it was demanded of them by pltfs., who commenced actions claiming damages in addition to the value of the wines:—Held: as the wine had been obtained by fraud from S., the agent of L., with a power to sell, the property in it passed to the three persons, who before the fraudulent contract was annulled could confer a title upon pltfs., & L. must be barred upon pltfs. undertaking to account to him for the value of the wine after deducting their advances.—*ATTENBOROUGH v. which was then actually carried on by such pawnbrokers, but was a general exemption of favour of all persons who were then licensed pawnbrokers, & therefore after the commencement of the Act such a licensed pawnbroker, his exors., administrators, assigns, or successors, could open a new business upon payment of the licence duty without the production of a magistrate's certificate.—*R. v. 184. Pawn ticket—Subject of larceny—Warrant for delivery of goods.]—Stealing a pawnbroker's duplicate is larceny. It may be described, in an indictment for larceny, as a warrant for the delivery of goods; since the Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), authorises & requires the pawnbroker to deliver the goods to the person producing the ticket. It may also be alleged to be a pawnbroker's ticket, or a piece of paper; for it is evidence of title to a specific chattel, the property in possession of the pawner, & consequently does not come within the common law rule, that larceny cannot be committed of documents concerning title to land or mere choses in action.—*R. v. Power to commit in default of satisfaction.]—(1) Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 24, enables justices in case it shall be proved before them that any goods pawned have been sold contrary to the Act, or have been embezzled or lost, or are become or have been rendered of less value than at the time of pawning through the default neglect or wilful misbehaviour of the person with whom the same were pawned, to award satisfaction to the owner as there specified:—Held: justices have no power in the above cases to commit in default of such satisfaction being made.

200. ——— Necessity for proof of actual neglect—As condition precedent to satisfaction.]—Under Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 24, the injury done to goods pawned, by an accidental fire on the premises of a pawnbroker, not affirmatively shown to have occurred through the default, neglect or wilful misbehaviour of the pawnbroker, does not authorise a justice to give satisfaction to the pawner; there being no prima facie presumption that such fire is owing to the default, etc., of the owner of the premises.—SYRED v. CARRUTHERS (1858), E. B. & E. 469; 27 L. J. M. C. 273; 31 L. T. O. S. 178; 23 J. P. 37; 4 Jur. N. S. 949; 6 W. R. 595; 120 E. R. 584.

Damage by neglect.]—See Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 28.

201. Loss of pawn—Reasonable cause of refusal to deliver.]—Goods pledged with a pawnbroker were lost through a burglary on his premises, caused by his negligence. The owner laid a complaint before justices, under Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 14, against the pawnbroker for refusing, without reasonable cause, to deliver up the goods upon tender of the proper amount. The justices made an order that the pawnbroker, not having shown reasonable cause to their satisfaction to the contrary, should deliver up the goods, or, in default, compensate the owner. On a case stated:—Held: the order was bad; Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 14, under which the order was made in effect, applying only to cases of wilful refusal by a pawnbroker to deliver up goods actually in his possession; & the justices should have made an order under Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 24, which empowers them to award compensation to the owner if, "in the course of any proceedings" under the Act, they shall find that the goods were lost "through the default, neglect, or wilful misbehaviour" of the pawnbroker.—SHACKELL v. WEST (1859), 2 E. & E. 326; 29 L. J. M. C. 45; 1 L. T. 28; 24 J. P. 22; 6 Jur. N. S. 95; 8 W. R. 22; 121 E. R. 123.

202. ———]—Where a pawnbroker has lost an article pledged to him, & is therefore not in possession of it at the time the person entitled to have delivery seeks to redeem it, the loss of the article constitutes, in the absence of dishonesty, a reasonable cause within the meaning of Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 31, for neglecting to deliver the pledge to the person entitled to have delivery thereof. The pawnbroker is therefore not liable to be convicted of an offence under that sect.—ALLWORTHY & WALKER v. CLAYTON, [1907] 2 K. B. 685; 76 L. J. K. B. 934; 96 L. T. 31; 71 J. P. 20; 21 Cox, C. C. 352, D. C.

203. ——— By default or neglect of pawnbroker.]—A pawnbroker placed a gold watch pledged, with other valuable property, in a strong room, on premises left at night without any guard or person to sleep on them. The premises were broken into & the watch stolen:—Held: a loss by default or neglect in the pawnbroker within Pawnbrokers Act, 1800 (c. 99), s. 24.—HEALING v. CATBRELL (1859), 1 L. T. 7; 23 J. 205. Pawning stolen article — Detention of pawnor on suspicion—Reasonableness of suspicion a question for judge—Moment of reasonable suspicion.]—It is a question for the judge to decide as to the reasonableness of a pawnbroker's suspicion, under Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (c. 93), s. 34, which enables a pawnbroker to give into custody a person offering in pawn an article which the pawnbroker reasonably suspects has been stolen; & in an action for false imprisonment against the pawnbroker, before pltf. can recover, he must show an absence of reasonable suspicion on the part of the pawnbroker.

A notice had been circulated by the police, describing several articles which had been stolen, & amongst them were two articles described as a gold horseshoe pin, set with seven diamonds, massive, & a gent's gold ring, set with three diamonds. This notice had been sent to deft., who was a pawnbroker. Some days after, pltf., a man of good character, entered deft.'s shop & offered in pawn a gold horseshoe pin, set with seven diamonds, & a gold diamond ring. Deft., after referring to the notice, asked pltf. if he was a dealer; pltf. said he was not. He then asked him where he got the articles, & he replied from a Mr. N. for the purpose of pawning, giving at the time Mr. N.'s address & his own name & address, which statements were correct. Deft., believing that the pin offered by pltf. was the stolen pin, sent for a constable, & gave pltf. into custody. In an action for false imprisonment against the pawnbroker:—Held: the question of the reasonableness of the pawnbroker's suspicion was a question for the judge & not for the jury, & there must be some evidence of the absence of reasonable suspicion, & as there was no such evidence in the present case deft. was not liable.

The moment for reasonable suspicion is the moment when the article is offered to the pawnbroker (SMITH, J.).—HOWARD v. CLARKE (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 558; 58 L. T. 401; 52 J. P. 310; 4 T. L. R. 261, D. C.

Part I.—Peerage.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Nature of peerage.]—(1) Nobility is not of nature, but of the King's creation.

(2) So as the man, that is not de jure a peer, or one of the nobility, to serve in the Upper House of the Parliament of England, is not in the legal proceedings of law accounted noble within England: & therefore if a countee of France or Spain, or any other foreign kingdom, should come into England, he should not here sue, or be sued by the name of countee, etc., for that he is none of the nobles that are members of the Upper House of the Parliament of England.

(3) But yet there is a diversity in our books worthy of observation; for the highest & lowest dignities are universal; for if a King of a foreign nation come into England, by the leave of the King of this realm, as it ought to be, in this case he shall sue & be sued by the name of a King.

Though the King be in a foreign Kingdom, yet he is judged in law a King there.—CALVIN'S CASE (1608), 7 Co. Rep. 1 a; 77 E. R. 377; sub nom. POSTNATI CASE, UNION OF SCOTLAND & ENGLAND CASE, 2 State Tr. 559; Moore, K. B. 790, Ex. Ch.

SECT. 2.—DEGREES OF PEERAGE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

8. No particular rank conferred.—By writ of summons.]—A peer cannot surrender his peerage to the Sovereign in any manner; & this law must be applied to a surrender made in 1302.

In 1302 Roger le Bygod, Earl of Norfolk, surrendered the earldom to Edward I. In 1312 Edward II. granted to Thomas de Brotherton &

Sect. 2.—Degrees of peerage: Sub-sects. 1, 2, 3 & 4.
Sect. 3: Sub-sect. 1.]

to the heirs of his body the earldom so surrendered. Thomas de Brotherton was frequently summoned by writ to Parliament & sat there. Lord Mowbray, having proved his pedigree as senior co-heir of Thomas de Brotherton, alleged that the earldom had fallen into abeyance, & claimed that the abeyance should be determined in his favour as senior co-heir:—Held: (1) the surrender by Roger le Bygod was invalid; the charter of 1312 was consequently invalid; the sitting in Parliament under the King's writ could not create an earldom; & Lord Mowbray had not made out his claim.

The King's writ, followed by a sitting in Parliament, of itself created a peerage, but assuming it did, it would not of itself create an earldom. An earldom was an office as well as a dignity . . . & the rank of an earl could not be conferred merely by the Sovereign addressing the peer by that title (LORD HALSBURY).

(2) Assuming the pedigree of the claimant to be established, & it is not disputed, & that there is no constitutional or legal difficulty in applying the practice of calling out of abeyance to earldoms as well as to baronies, which it is not now necessary to discuss (LORD ASHBORNE).

(3) There is no doubt that a man cannot alien a title of honour either by surrender to the Crown or by grant to a subject. This is now settled law, & the reason is this, that it is a personal dignity which descends to his posterity & is fixed in the blood. In other words, he cannot by his own act alter or affect the status of his descendants or the other persons in the succession (LORD DAVEY).

(4) Another argument has been used which appears to me to involve a confusion between a right of peerage & a title of honour conferring a particular rank in the peerage, which is a matter merely collateral (LORD DAVEY).—NORFOLK (EARLDOM) CASE, [1907] A. SUB-SECT. 3.—EARLS.

10. Office as well as dignity—For defence of realm.]—Misnomer abates an indictment. A peer indicted for murder by his Christian & surname as a commoner may plead the misnomer in abatement. In such plea deft. need not aver that the place from whence he takes his title is in England. Nor, if he shows that his creation was by patent, that he is one of the peers of England. Nor, particularly, if he claims by descent conclude to the record. An order of the House of Lords upon a petition for a trial by his peers disallowing his peerage, & directing that he should be tried at common law, is no answer to such plea.

(1) Earls were always created by letters patent (HOLT, C.J.).

(2) An earldom consisted in office for the defence of the King & realm . . . earls (comites) had not their denomination from the county, but a comitatus regem (HOLT, C.J.).

(3) The place from whence the patentee takes his title is not necessarily to be in England, nor in reality is there any necessity, that there be any place (HOLT, C.J.).

(4) As a peer cannot divest himself of his own honour or the privilege of it so his peerage can by no law of this kingdom, as I know, be taken from him but by Act of Parliament, attainder of his person or by sci. fa. to repeal his patent (HOLT, C.J.).

(5) The House of Peers have jurisdiction over their own members in matters of privilege, precedence & for any other thing relating to Parliament. They can do in that supreme ct. no more than what by law they may do: & if they exceed that power by holding plea, of which the common law hath not given a jurisdiction, what they do will be void: . . . & no such judgment or proceeding can bind any inferior ct. from examining of it, or declaring it to be void in law (HOLT, C.J.).—*R. v. SUB-SECT. 4.—BARONS.

13. Barony by tenure—Not assignable.]—

(1) The peerage of England depends entirely on usage, both as to the power of the Crown, & as to any claim that may be made by a subject. Therefore whether or not barony by tenure ever existed, that is to say, a barony running with & inherent in certain lands, & transferable by deed or will with the lands to strangers, a dignity of such nature has long been discontinued, & would now lead to absurd consequences, for it would render dignities matter of sale or capricious, as well as compulsory alienation on the part of a subject.

(2) The Committee for Privileges will in its discretion permit documents to be proved by printed minutes of proceedings before a former Committee on the same peerages, but as a rule will require the production of the original documents.—BERKELEY (PEERAGE) CASE (1861), 8 H. 27. ————[The use of the term "plenum parlamentum" is not conclusive to show that the assembly to which it is applied is a Parliament for peerage purposes. To constitute a Parliament for peerage purposes it is essential that the Commons should be represented thereat & that it should conform in its more essential characteristics to the Model Parliament of 1295.

Upon a claim for an ancient barony claimant proved by an entry in the Parliament Roll of 1290 that on May 29, 1290, the ancestor from whom he traced his title sat in an assembly held at Westminster of bishops, earls, & barons, who, assembled "in pleno parlamento" & for themselves &, "quantum in ipsis est," for the whole community, granted to the King an extraordinary aid of 40s. per knight's fee to marry his eldest daughter. A fortnight later the King issued writs to the sheriffs for the election & return of two or three knights for each shire, who arrived on July 15. Before the arrival of the knights this Parliament passed Statute Quia Emptores:—Held: (1) the assembly of May 29 was not a Parliament so constituted as that a sitting therein in pursuance of a writ could form the foundation for a claim to a hereditary peerage; (2) it was impossible to presume from the presence of claimant's ancestor at that assembly on May 29 that he continued to sit therein after the arrival of the knights of the shire; therefore, claimant had failed to prove the existence of the alleged barony.—ST. JOHN (PEERAGE) CASE, [1915] A. C. 282; 30 T. L. R. 640, H. L.

28. ————[Claimant to an ancient barony which had long been in abeyance proved that an ancestor received a writ of summons in 1283 to the Parliament of Shrewsbury, the primary business of which was to deal with the traitor David of Wales. This assembly was admittedly not a properly constituted Parliament for peerage purposes owing to the absence of the clergy, but claimant contended that, on the construction of a grant made by the King in 1277 to David & his brother Owen, David was thereby created a peer, that this Parliament was summoned for the trial of a peer by his brother peers, & that the fact that claimant's ancestor had been summoned by name to this Parliament afforded a presumption that he was himself a peer. Claimant further proved that another ancestor had been summoned in 1300 to the Parliament of Lincoln, at which a claim by Pope Boniface VIII. to rights of superiority over Scotland was considered, & that he sealed the Barons' letter of protest to the Pope. Claimant further proved that this ancestor was summoned by a writ dated Dec. 3, 1326, to attend the prorogation of a Parliament of Westminster on the morrow of the following Epiphany, Jan. 7, 1327, & produced a Charter Roll, Feb. 20, 1327, from which it appeared that he was a witness to an inspeximus & confirmation by the King of a charter granted by his father to a college of the University of Oxford, & that this confirmation was expressed to be "with the assent of the prelates, earls, barons, & commonalty of our kingdom being in our present Parliament assembled at Westminster":—Held: (1) as to the so-called Parliament of Shrewsbury, claimant's contention that this assembly was summoned for the trial of a peer by his brother peers failed, there being no adequate proof that David was created a peer, & having regard to the anomalous nature of the assembly & to the absence of all proof that claimant's ancestor took part in its proceedings. In fact, as a peer, the mere attendance of the latter in obedience to the writ was not sufficient to justify the inference that he was thereby created a peer; (2), as to the so-called Parliament of Lincoln, it was not so duly constituted as a Parliament that the composition, adoption, signature & sealing of the letter addressed to the Pope was a proceeding properly so called in Parliament, & the service of the writ of summons upon claimant's ancestor, plus his subsequent attendance, his participation in the adoption of the letter, & his sealing of it, did not afford sufficient evidence that he was then created or had theretofore become a peer of the realm; (3) as to the Parliament of Westminster, the King, in confirming the charter, was not carrying out a transaction, participation in which would have the same effect in proving a person to be entitled to a peerage as would a sitting as a peer in Parliament duly summoned to transact the business of the State; therefore, the claim failed.—BEAUCHAMP (BARONY) CASE, [1925] A. C. 153; 94 L. J. P. C. 35; 40 T. L. R. 862, H. L.

Sect. 3.—Creation: Sub-sects. 1, 2 & 3.]

29. ——— Writ may be presumed.]—

(1) On the consideration of a claim to an ancient barony, which has been long in abeyance, if claimant proves that his ancestor sat as a peer in Parliament, & no patent or charter of creation can be discovered, it is now the established rule to hold that the barony was created by writ of summons & sitting, although the original writ of summons, or enrolment of it, is not produced.

Where it is proved, after a careful search of all the depositories in which a patent of peerage would have been likely to have been found, that there is no trace of any patent, the writ of summons, to sitting in Parliament by the ancestor under it, shall be evidence of the title to the peerage descending to the heirs of the body, including females.

(2) A claimant of a barony as co-heir is required not only to give notice to the other co-heirs, but also to give prima facie proofs of the pedigree of such of them as decline to claim the barony, to enable the House to make a satisfactory report to the Crown.

(3) The proper course for a co-heir claiming a peerage in abeyance, is to petition the Crown to terminate the abeyance in his favour; but if he does not claim the dignity, & it appears from the case of claimant that he has an interest, the House will, on his petition, allow him to appear before the Committee of Privileges, & present a case to protect his interest in the peerage.

(4) The minutes of evidence & proceedings before the Committee of Privileges in one case, are not necessarily receivable as evidence in another case.

(5) One of the co-heirs to a barony in abeyance was attainted of treason, & his heir & descendants were restored in blood by Act of Parliament:—Held: it is competent to the Crown to terminate the abeyance in favour of the heir of the person so attainted, or of the heir of any of the other co-heirs.—BRAYE (PEERAGE) CASE (1839), 6 Cl. & Fin. 757; 3 State Tr. 30. ——— ——— ———.]—(1) On a claim by co-heirs to the dignity of a baron, created in the reign of Henry VIII., & in abeyance from the reign of Charles II., they proved that their ancestor sat among the peers in Parliament in 1533; that he was duly summoned to & sat in the Parliament of 1536, & that he & his heirs male, who were also his heirs general, were summoned to & sat in several succeeding Parliaments, by the style & title of Lord Vaux. To account for the want of evidence of a writ of summons prior to the sitting in 1533, they showed that there were no Lords Journals extant from 1515 to 1533; that the enrolments of writs during that period were very imperfect; & that, although the Patent Rolls were complete, no patent or charter of creation of a barony of Vaux, nor any record or trace of such patent, was discovered, after the most diligent searches in all the offices for records:—Held: the barony of Vaux was created by writ of summons & sitting in Parliament, & was therefore descendible to heirs general.

(2) Where there are several co-heirs to a dignity, & some only claim it, they must give notice to the others.

(3) The statements of chroniclers or contemporary historians are not admissible as evidence of the creation of a peerage.

(4) The admission of an inscription in a churchyard by a former Committee of Privileges, does not make a copy from their minutes necessarily admissible in another case.

(5) A paper writing found among an ancestor's papers, in the custody of a stranger in blood, & not signed by the ancestor, nor by any of his family, is not admissible to show the state of the family.

SUB-SECT. 2.—IRISH PEERAGES.

See Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (c. 67), art. 4.

38. What amounts to extinction of peerage.]—The word "peerage" in the fifth clause of the fourth art. in Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (c. 67), means the status & condition of a peer, & therefore where one person held many titles, by any one of which he could sit in the Irish House of Peers, so long as any one of those titles remained in him or his descendants the loss of any of the others did not constitute an extinction of a peerage.

A., before the Union with Ireland, was a peer of Ireland, by the title of Earl M. That title had descended to him from an ancestor, to whom it was granted with the usual limitation to the heirs male of his body. Before the Union took effect, A. received a new patent, creating him Baron of M., remainder to the heirs male of his body, failing whom to B., & the heirs male of his body: A. died without leaving male heirs of his body, & the Earldom of M. was left without a successor, & the Barony of M. passed to B.:—Held: this was not such an extinction of a peerage as was contemplated by the Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (c. 67), & consequently could not be taken as one of three extinctions, on the happening of which, the Crown could create a new Irish peerage.

Qu.: whether when the validity of an existing grant of a peerage is questioned, the A.-G. is bound to appear to support it.—FERMOY (PEERAGE) CASE (1856), 5 H. L. Cas. 716; 8 State Tr. N. S. 723; 23 L. T. O. S. 15; 10 E. R. 1084, H. L.

39. ——— [Effect of subsequent revival.]—Where three Irish peerages are considered extinct, & a new creation takes place, after which one of these peerages is revived, the new creation is valid under Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (c. 67), but the Crown's right again to create a new peerage will be suspended till the full number of vacancies has occurred.—BLOOMFIELD (PEERAGE) CASE (1831), 2 Dow. & Cl. 344; 2 State Tr. #### SUB-SECT. 3.—LIMITATION OF GRANT.

40. Not regulated by law as to grant of land.]—

On Sept. 3, 1553, Sir Edward Courtenay was created Earl of Devon by a patent containing the following words: "Habendum et tenendum nomen statum stitum titulum honorem et dignitatem Comitis Devonie predictas cum omnibus et singulis preeminenciis honoribus et ceteris quibuscunque hujusmodi statui Comitis Devonie pertinentibus sive spectantibus prefato Edwardo et heredibus suis masculis imperpetuum." The grantee of the peerage died on Sept. 10, 1556, & no one assumed the title until this century. In June, 1830, Viscount Courtenay presented a petition to the King, claiming the Earldom of Devon as heir male of Sir Edward Courtenay. The A.-G. reported that claimant had proved his descent as alleged, but that the question whether under the patent a title was established to the dignity of Earl of Devon should be referred to the House of Peers. The Crown referred the question to the House of Lords, & the House of Lords referred it to the Committee for Privileges:—Held: (1) a grant by the Crown of honours & titles is not regulated by the same law as a grant of lands; (2) Statute De Donis, 1285 (c. 1), does not apply to honours & titles; (3) the grant of a peerage to the grantee & his heirs male is valid, although a grant of land by the Crown with the same limitation is void; (4) under such a grant the peerage descends not only to heirs male of the body, but also to collateral heirs male, i.e. to males claiming entirely through a male descent, but does not descend to heirs general, as would be the case in a grant of land by a common person to the grantee & his heirs male; (5) the Crown may grant a peerage for life, & not only for the life of the grantee but pur autre vie.—DEVON (PEERAGE) CASE (1831), 2 State Tr. 41. ——— [Whether limitation to heirs male valid.]—(1) The decision of the Committee for Privileges as to the advice it shall give Her Majesty upon one particular claim of peerage, does not resemble the decision of the House sitting as the tribunal of ultimate appeal upon a question of law in a suit between two adverse parties; it is in no sense a judgment, & cannot, therefore, be treated as a binding authority in another claim of peerage, even though the terms of the patents in the two cases may be like each other.

(2) The Crown cannot give to the grant of a dignity or honour a quality of descent unknown to the law.

(3) A limitation to heirs in the grant of a peerage may be incapable of taking effect, & yet the patent, so far as the grantee himself is concerned, may not be void. In the reign of Richard II., an earldom was created habendum, etc., "A. et heredibus suis masculis imperpetuum." The grantee sat in Parliament as earl under this creation:—Held: it did not create a dignity descendible to his heirs male general.—WILTONS (PEERAGE) CASE (1869), L. 46. Shifting clause.—(1) By letters patent the barony of B. was conferred on E. for life, with successive remainders to her second & other sons & the heirs male of their respective bodies. The patent contained a proviso that if the second son of E. or any other person taking under the letters patent should succeed to the earldom of D., the "succession to" the dignity of B. should "devolve upon" the son of E. or the heir who should be next entitled to succeed to the barony of B., if the person so succeeding to the earldom of D. was dead, without issue male. Lands having been devised by testatrix to trustees & their heirs, upon trust "to convey, settle, & assure" same "in a course of entail to correspond as nearly as may be with the limitations of" the barony of B., " & the provisos affecting the same contained in the letters patent " a settlement was executed in which was inserted a clause providing that, if the second son of E., who had then by the death of E. become Baron B., or any other person taking under the limitations therein contained should succeed to the earldom of D., the "succession to" the lands thereby settled should "devolve upon" the son of E. or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed to the barony of B., if the person so succeeding to the earldom of D. was dead without issue male. The second son of E. afterwards succeeded to the earldom of D. He had issue male:—Held: upon the second son of E. succeeding to the earldom of D. the third son of E. became entitled in possession to the settled estates.

47. —.]—(1) Where the Crown has pleased to refer to the House of Lords the consideration of a patent of peerage, it becomes the duty of the House to inform the Crown what is the construction to be put upon the terms of any clause in the patent.

(2) There can be no use or trust in the case of a peerage. Therefore where, in a patent of peerage, there were successive limitations of the peerage in the ordinary form of descent, & then a clause was introduced which, on the happening of a collateral event, would transfer the enjoyment of the peerage from the existing peer & his heirs to a new holder, such clause was held to be invalid. A patent granted the dignity of Baroness Buckhurst to a lady for her life, then to R. W., her second son & his heirs male, in default, to M. S., her third son & his heirs male, & so on to the other younger sons of the same lady. The patent then went on with this proviso: " & we will that if R. W., or any other person taken under this patent shall succeed to the Earldom of D. I. W., & there shall, upon, or at any time after, the occurrence of such event, be any other younger son, or any heir male of the body of any such other son, then, & as often as the same shall happen, the succession to the honours & dignities hereby created shall devolve upon the son of Elizabeth," etc., or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed to the dignity of Baron Buckhurst if the person so succeeding to the Earldom of D. I. W. was dead without issue male:—Held: this proviso was invalid, & R. W., the first baron under the patent, who, as such baron, had sat & voted in the House of Lords, though he succeeded to the Earldom of D. I. W., continued to hold the barony as before.

(3) Semble: if R. W. had become Earl D. I. W. during the life of his mother, & before he himself succeeded to the barony, it might have gone to his next brother, but it having once vested in R. W. it could not be divested by the effect of the proviso.

(4) The fountain of source of all dignities cannot hold a dignity from himself. The dignity, therefore, as a dignity to be held by the sovereign terminates, not by virtue of any provision in its creation, but from the absolute incapacity of the sovereign to hold a dignity (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—BUCKHURST (PEERAGE) CASE (1876), 2 App. Cas. 1, H. The Journals of the House of Lords showed that he was summoned to, & sat in, the Parliament of 1548, & subsequent Parliaments. Creation of baronies by patent was not then unusual; but no patent or record or other trace of a patent, creating the barony of Wharton could be found:—Held: the barony was created by writ & sitting in 1548, & was descendible to heirs general of the body.

(2) A decretal order in Chancery, reciting the substance of the bill & answer, is admissible, on proof of pedigree, to establish the identity of parties to the suit: but an answer alone, though sworn but not filed, is not admissible.

(3) Scottish wills, registered in the Ct. of Session, are retained there, & if it is necessary to prove any such wills in England, a certified copy is given out, & is admitted to probate in the English Ecclesiastical Cts. The Lords Committees for Privileges will not, on claims of peerage, receive such copy, unless it is shown that the original will cannot be produced.

(4) If a judgment of outlawry stand in the way of a claim to a barony in abeyance, although it is clearly erroneous, the committee of privileges cannot overlook it or reverse it; but claimant must apply to the proper tribunal for its reversal,

& produce the judgment of reversal to the committee.

59. ——— Letters patent were granted by the Crown to a commoner, purporting to create him a baron of the United Kingdom for life, with a seat in Parliament. The letters patent were followed by a writ of summons to Parliament in the usual form. The House referred it to a Committee for Privileges to examine & consider the letters patent & to report their opinion thereon to the House. This reference was made without any previous reference of the matter by the Crown to the House. The Committee reported "that neither the letters patent nor the letters patent with the usual writ of summons issued in pursuance thereof, can entitle the grantee therein named to sit & vote in Parliament." The House affirmed the resolution. The Committee declined to put a question to the judges on this matter, which did not involve the validity of the patent for all purposes, but only the right under it to sit & vote in this House.—WENSLEYDALE (PEERAGE) CASE (1856), 5 H. 66. ——— (1) Queen Mary's creation of the Earldom of Mar in 1565 proved by a long train of circumstantial evidence.

Upon a review of all the circumstances of the case, I have arrived at the conclusion that the determination of it must depend solely on the effect of the creation of the dignity by Queen Mary & on that alone; . . . & there being no charter or instrument of creation in existence, & nothing to show what was to be the course of descent of this dignity, the prima facie presumption of law is that it is descendible to heirs male, which presumption has not in this case been rebutted by any evidence to the contrary (LORD CHELMSFORD).

It is clearly made out that the title of Mar which now exists was created by Queen Mary, some time between July 28 & Aug. 1, 1565; . . . & the only question in the case is whether that peerage so created by Queen Mary should be taken to be, according to the ordinary rule, a peerage descendible to male heirs only, or whether it should be taken to be a peerage descendible to heirs general. Now the prima facie presumption being in favour of heirs male . . . there is absolutely nothing which can be taken to be evidence in any way countervailing the prima facie presumption.

Sect. 3.—Creation: Sub-sect. 3. Sect. 4: Sub-sects. 1, 2 & 3.]

... The burden of proof lies upon opposing petitioner, & it not having been in any way discharged I am compelled to arrive at the conclusion ... that this must be taken to be a dignity descendible to heirs male, & therefore that it is now vested in the Earl of Kellie (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(2) In the competition between Bruce & Baliol for the Crown of Scotland, the assessors appointed by King Edward, in answer to questions put to them, stated that "earldoms in the kingdom of Scotland were not divisible, & that if an earldom devolved upon daughters, the eldest born carried off the whole in entirety," thus speaking of a descent to females as a possible event (LORD CHELMSFORD).—MAR (PEERAGE) CASE (1875), 1 App. Cas. 1, H. ##### B. Lapse of Time.

166. No bar to claim.]—HASTINGS (PEERAGE) CASE, No. 241, post.

167. —.]—(1) An ancient barony in fee, after having been enjoyed by the lineal heirs of the first baron successively for centuries, then becoming dormant for some time, was claimed & again enjoyed by one who, after full investigation, was found to be the heir of the first & last barons; it afterwards fell into & remained in abeyance among his coheirs for more than eighty years:—Semble: it is not necessary for one of these coheirs claiming the barony, to give proofs of the first creation, & of the divers mesne descents of it.

(2) Semble: on a claim to an ancient barony, minutes of proceedings on a former claim, before the King in Council, are admissible in evidence in the House of Lords.

(3) A long abeyance of a barony in fee, if satisfactorily explained, is no objection to a claim.

(4) A family pedigree, produced from the proper custody, & purporting to have been made by an ancestor of claimant before the year 1751, was offered in evidence, on proof of the handwriting, by a witness who had been for many years inspector of franks & of official correspondence; & who said that, from a few inspections he had of two or three other documents which were proved to be of the same ancestor's writing, he had formed in his mind such a standard of the character of his handwriting as to be able, without immediate comparison with those documents, to say whether any other document that might be produced to him was or was not in the same handwriting:—Held: the evidence was inadmissible; (5) claimant's solr., who said he had acquired a knowledge of the character of the ancestor's handwriting from having had occasion from time to time, in the course of his business for claimant, to examine several deeds & other documents written or signed by the ancestor, & which came to claimant together with property formerly belonging to that ancestor, was a competent witness to prove the handwriting of the pedigree.—FITZWALTER (PEERAGE) CASE (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 193, 946; 8 E. (2) The House of Lords is now the only satisfactory tribunal to determine questions on claims to dignities, on reference from the Crown: accordingly, a question of law having arisen on a petition of an Irish Peer, presented to the House of Lords, claiming to be admitted to vote at the election of Irish representative peers, the House, with a view to a more solemn adjudication, recommended a petition claiming the peerage to be presented to the Crown, in order that it might be referred by the Crown to the House, with the report of the law officers of the Crown annexed, & then the House, acting on the report of its Committee of Privileges, would adjudicate the right, & report the same to the Crown.—WATERFORD'S (EARL) CASE (1832), 6 Cl. & Fin. 133; 3 State Tr. ##### A. In General.

238. Particular rule directed by legislature to be observed—In every court of civil procedure—Whether binding on Committee of Privileges.—SHREWSBURY (PEERAGE) CASE, No. 269, post.

239. Exceptional rule observed only before Committee of Privileges.—(1) It cannot be deemed that, as a general rule in ordinary cts. of law, a recital of certain facts in a private Act of Parliament is not admissible as evidence of the truth of those facts against persons not parties to the private Act of Parliament. That cannot be disputed, but in these cases of peerages recitals in certain private Acts are admitted. Even these recitals in other private Acts are not admitted (BRETT, L.J.).

(2) The rule which applies in the Committee of Privileges cannot be a general rule, because it is stated in terms which would comprise cases in which it is known the cts. would not admit the evidence. Then how is that rule to be dealt with? It seems to me that it must be dealt with as an exceptional case, & that it is a rule laid down to be observed before a Committee of Privileges, & in no other case & before no other tribunal. If that be so, of course the rule is no authority for the purpose which we have in hand, which is a matter before an ordinary ct. of law (BRETT, L.J.).

(3) Visitation of Heralds under a royal commission has been admitted in cases of pedigree before a Committee of Privileges, but I cannot help thinking that that also is exceptional & confined to that tribunal, & that a Visitation of Heralds would not be admitted in any ct. of law as evidence of facts stated in the report of the Heralds, or stated in the Heralds' Books. It seems to me that those authorities are confined to the tribunal of the Committee of Privileges, & that they obviously are not authorities for dealing with any document or with any head of evidence in cts. of law (BRETT, L.J.).—*POLINI v. 241. ———.]—(1) It is now settled law that a sitting in Parliament in pursuance of a writ of summons constitutes, in the absence of a patent, a dignity descendible to the heirs general of the body of the person summoned: & that in claims to ancient dignities, a summons & a sitting in Parliament are required to be proved.

(2) The usual evidence of a writ of summons, is the enrolment; & of a sitting, is the Parliament roll or journals of the time. Where the writs of summons, or enrolments of them, & the journals of remote times are wanting, a memorandum, entered on a Parliamentary roll, of a grant to the King in his Parliament, by certain persons named "et caeteri magnates et proceres tunc in Parlamento existentes," is sufficient evidence that a person named therein sat as a Lord of Parliament, although there was no proof that he was summoned to that particular Parliament.

(3) Instruments purporting to be the acts of peers, but not acts done in Parliament, & not necessarily the acts of Peers of Parliament, are not evidence that a person named in them ever sat in Parliament, although he was certainly summoned.

(4) In a claim to an ancient barony, it was proved that Henry de H. was summoned by special writ to Parliament, in 1264; but there was no proof that he ever sat, there being no rolls or journals of that period. His son & heir John de H. sat in the Parliament of 1290; but there was no proof that he was summoned to that Parliament, there being no writs of summons, or enrolments of them, extant from 1264–1295. To the Parliament of 1295, & to several subsequent Parliaments, he was summoned, but there was no proof that he sat in any of them:—Held: it might be well presumed that John de H. sat in the Parliament of 1290, in pursuance of a summons; on the principle that omnia presumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium.

(5) Length of time is no bar to a claim to a dignity; yet if a series of persons, of right entitled to it, do not enjoy it, or assert their right, a presumption may arise against the right, on claim by their descendants, unless the absence of enjoyment or claim is satisfactorily accounted for.—HASTINGS (PEERAGE) CASE (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 144; 4 State Tr. (2) If a claimant omit to give evidence of the creation & limitation of one of several dignities to which, he states, in his petition, that he is of right entitled, the Committee for Privileges will not report that he has made good his claim to that dignity, on the presumption that it descended from the same ancestor with the other dignities to which the claimant has proved his right.

(3) In a claim of peerage, it is not sufficient, in the petition to the Crown, to state that the claimant is of right entitled to the dignity, but the petition should pray that the claimant may be declared so entitled, & the Committee for Privileges or the House has no power to supply the defect of the prayer, but it will be necessary for the claimant to present an amended petition to the Crown.—HUNTLY (PEERAGE) CASE (1838), 5 Cl. & Fin. 349; 7 E. 254. Admissibility.—In subsequent claim.]—(1) The right to the same dignity having been the subject of investigation in the Irish House of Lords, the minutes of proceedings & of evidence, including depositions taken by comrs. under an order of that House held admissible here, the witnesses being dead.

(2) It is the privilege as well as the duty of the A.-G. for Ireland, to attend this House on the investigation of claims to Irish peerages, but he may, with leave of the House, depute counsel to attend for him.

(3) Petitioner to the House of Lords, claiming, as an Irish peer, to be admitted to vote at the election of representative peers of Ireland, was required in consequence of a doubt of his right & also of an adverse claim, to give in a printed case containing his pedigree & references to his proofs.

(4) Claimant to a peerage having his petition to the House, stated a prima facie case, but being unable on account of his circumstances to complete it, the A.-G. was ordered to bring forward his witnesses & conduct his case at the expense of the Crown. But the House makes such orders reluctantly as they may embarrass the proceedings & encourage adventurers.

(5) The pedigree of a claimant as a descendant from the seventh son of the first peer, who was so created by letters patent to hold to him & the heirs male of his body, stated that that peer left seven sons, that the issue of the first & second were extinct, & that the four next died without issue; there being no contemporaneous account of them, no other evidence except reputation in the family, which agreed with the pedigree:—Held: it might be presumed they died without issue, more especially as during a long contest for the dignity no descendant of them claimed it.

(6) Documents put before the House by a claimant, although not admitted in evidence, held to be fit matter for observation by his adversary's counsel, to prevent prejudice.—ROSCOMMON'S (EARL) CASE (1828), 6 Cl. & Fin. 97; 7 E. R. 634, H. L.

On the death of one holder of these titles his eldest son received a writ of summons to attend the House of Peers as an English viscount. He did so, & took his seat as a viscount. He subsequently petitioned to have his claim to vote for representative peers of Ireland allowed, & it was allowed. After his death, his son received a writ of summons as an English viscount, & took his seat in that character. He then petitioned to be admitted to vote for representative peers of Ireland in virtue of the Irish earldom. The petition came before the Committee for Privileges. The patents creating the Irish earldom & the English viscounty, the writ of summons to the previous viscount, & the entry on the journals showing that the preceding peer had taken his seat, & likewise the resolution of the Committee for Privileges admitting his claim to vote for representative peers, were all proved:—Held: this was not sufficient to establish the title of the present claimant; the evidence must be such as would of itself, if the claim was now made without reference to any previous claim, be sufficient to establish it. Such evidence not being producible at the moment, the consideration of the claim was adjourned.—DONOUGHMORE (PEERAGE) CASE (1853), 3 H. L. Cas. 822; 10 E. R. 327, H. L.

265. ———.]—FAIRFAX (PEERAGE) CASE, [1908] W. N. 226, H. L.

266. ——— Family missal.]—(1) B. claiming, of right, to be Lord Baron of Slane, in the peerage of Ireland, as heir general of the last Lord Slane, & alleging that the same was a barony in fee, showed by his statement & proofs, that from the first creation of a peerage in his ancestors to the year 1597, four such peers, dying at various periods without issue male, but leaving daughters or sisters, were severally succeeded in the dignity by the heirs male, uncles or cousins, who were in possession of the family estates. Claimant further showed that a Lord Baron of Slane, whom he alleged to be the last peer of the family, & of whom he stated himself to be sole heir general, left a daughter, an only child, who long survived him but did not claim the peerage, & also two sisters, the elder of whom he stated to have died without issue, & from the younger the claimant derived his descent as her sole heir:—Held: the claimant, though he might be heir general, had failed to make out his claim to the dignity, as it appeared by his own statement to have gone uniformly to the heirs male in exclusion of the heirs female, who had never made claim to it.

(2) F., whose petition to the King claiming the barony of Slane as heir male was referred to the A.-G., but no report made thereon, was, upon petition to the House of Lords & a statement by the A.-G. to the Committee of Privileges, admitted to appear by his counsel & agents to oppose B.'s claim.

(3) If in a claim of peerage, an important question of law arises, the Committee will depart from the ordinary rule, & hear two counsel on each side.

(4) In a claim of peerage, where there is no patent of creation or enrolment of such patent, & the contemporaneous Lords Journals are not in existence, an old MS. book, purporting to be copied from the Journals by an officer whose duty it was to prepare lists of peers present & absent, will be received as evidence of a peer's sitting in Parliament.

(5) A return to a royal commission, not signed nor sealed by the comrs., is not admissible to prove any matter therein stated.

(6) A pedigree made by a person with a view to a suit respecting property is not receivable in a claim of peerage by his son to prove his descent; nor a case stated for the opinion of counsel, produced from the family papers of a distant relative of the claimant.

(7) Entries in a family missal are admitted as evidence of births, deaths, & marriages of members of the family, just like similar entries in a family Bible. To make a copy of a record admissible in evidence, it is not enough that it was held by a witness while another read the original to him. There must be a change of hands, or the witness must himself read the copy with the original.—SLANE (PEERAGE) CASE (1835), 5 Cl. & Fin. 23; 10 Bli. N. S. 1; 7 E. R. 311, H. L.

267. ——— Old prayer book.]—(1) The case of a claimant to a peerage depending on the genuineness of entries written in an old prayer book, & dated 1728 & 1729, several witnesses, whose occupations for a long time made them so conversant with manuscripts of different ages, that they could take on themselves to name the period in which any manuscript previous to the year 1700 was written, were all of opinion that the entries were written in the early part & before the middle of the last century, & at or about the period of their dates:—Held: such evidence is but small testimony, hardly entitled to any weight, especially as the book containing the entries was not satisfactorily identified.

(2) Claimant to a peerage, after his case was referred to the House of Lords, & evidence taken on it, presented an additional case, alleging an inscription on a tombstone in a churchyard in Ireland; which, if proved, would sustain his claim. The tombstone could not be produced. Several witnesses from the neighbourhood swore positively that they saw the tombstone & inscription about twenty years ago. There was no material discrepancy in their statements, nor were any witnesses called to contradict them:—Held: the evidence was not sufficient of the existence of the tombstone or of the inscription; & the neglect of claimant to produce this material part of his case earlier, induced a suspicion of fraud; which could not be removed without the production of the tombstone, or of other witnesses of greater credit from the neighbourhood.—TRACY (PEERAGE) CASE (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 154; 1 L. T. O. S. 310; 8 E. R. 700, H. L.

268. ———.]—(1) In a claim of peerage, where the question was whether the deceased peer, the father of the claimant, had been married or not, a Prayer Book, found after the death of the claimant's mother among her papers, was received, & an entry made in her handwriting, declaring the fact of the marriage, read from it, not as conclusively proving that fact, but as a declaration of it made by one of the parties at the time.

(2) A will of deceased peer, made many years before his death, declaring, & in the most solemn form, his marriage, & the legitimacy of his son, the claimant of the peerage, was proposed to be read as a declaration made by one of the parties; but it was rejected, because the date, & certain expressions in it, showed it to have been written after a suit to annul a marriage of the deceased peer had been instituted by his father, & because there was nothing to show that that marriage was not the very marriage in question. The declarations of deceased clergyman to his son, to the effect that he had celebrated a marriage between deceased peer & his alleged wife, are not receivable in evidence as the declarations of deceased party made against his own interest; such interest not being an interest of a pecuniary nature.

(3) In a claim of peerage, where evidence has been produced for the purpose of establishing a certain point, the party who has produced it will not, should the Crown call evidence of a contradictory kind, be allowed to produce additional evidence confirmatory of the first.

(4) Before claimant's junior counsel summed up the evidence previously to the opening of the case on the part of the Crown, the counsel for the Crown were required by the Committee to declare whether they would or would not call evidence on a question of foreign law, so as to enable claimant's counsel to determine whether they would then, as they could not afterwards, produce any additional evidence on that question.—SUSSEX (PEERAGE) CASE (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 85; 6 State Tr. #### 269. Statement in will.—In custody of stranger.]

—(1) A claimed a peerage. An estate was alleged to be annexed to the title. Persons who, in the event of the peerage being extinct, would be entitled to the estate, but who alleged that their title would be defeated if the claim to the peerage should be established, were allowed to appear, & he heard in opposition to the claim.

(2) A copy of a plate of the arms of the Knights of the Garter, now existing in the Chapel Royal at Windsor, was received in evidence, the plate itself not being removable, except by authority of the Queen, & no such plate having been removed since first put up in the reign of Henry V.

(3) Though the rule in peerage cases is, that the original will must itself be produced to the Committee, a copy of a will brought by the officer from the Prerogative Ct. was admitted in evidence, such will having been made at a time when the course of the officers of that ct. was to take copies of wills, & to return the originals to the exors., & the persons now opposing the admission of the copy being the representatives of those exors.

(4) Semble: the recitals in private Acts of Parliament of very recent date are not evidence of the facts stated in them, such recitals being no longer submitted to the previous approval of the judges.

(5) When the legislature has directed that a particular rule as to evidence shall be adopted "in every court of civil judicature," though those words do not include a Committee for Privileges, such Committee will, if the rule itself is convenient, adopt & act upon it. C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 27, which permits in all cts. of civil jurisdiction comparison of handwriting as a means of evidence was therefore adopted by the Committee.

(6) In 1671, the Crown issued a commission to authorise the College of Heralds to receive & record the family pedigrees of all such "Benefactors," as should be willing to contribute sums of money for the rebuilding of the Heralds' College, before then destroyed in the Great Fire of London. A pedigree so furnished to the College by a member of a family, & the signature to which was proved, was received in evidence, but only as a declaration of a member of the family.

(7) The declarations of a wife, as to the state of her husband's family, are equally admissible with the declarations of a husband as to the state of his wife's family. This admissibility does not extend to statements made by the wife's father.

(8) If a party is admitted to oppose a claim of peerage, he must make his opening statement after claimant's evidence has been closed, whether claimant's counsel sums up or not.

(9) The book called "Arms & Descents of the Nobility, E. 16," though produced from the Heralds' College, is not admissible in evidence, not being kept under authority of any official order, or in discharge of any official duty.

(10) A nobleman who had the wardship of another nobleman, under a grant from the Crown, made a will. This will contained a statement of the marriage of the ward with testator's daughter, accompanied by a direction, that in the event of the death of the ward his younger brother should marry the lady. The will was tendered in evidence to prove that the ward had a younger brother. Qu.: whether it was admissible.

(11) An old "collection of monumental inscriptions" in country churches:—Held: inadmissible to show what had been the inscription on a partly defaced tomb.

(12) A barrister who had attended as counsel for claimant of a peerage during the whole of one session, was, at the commencement of the next, appointed A.-G. The Committee for Privileges allowed him to continue to act as counsel for claimant, & accepted the Solicitor-General as his representative on the part of the Crown.

(13) Letters addressed to a lady who had married into a particular family were produced from the custody of a member of that family, who likewise assessed many other family papers & deeds, & held by descent some of the property formerly belonging to the husband of the addressee of the letters:—Held: admissible in evidence, to show in what character she was addressed by members of her own family.

(14) Bill filed in Chancery by A. as next friend to B. Deft. put in an answer, which was not signed; but there was indorsed a consent by A., that this answer should be received without oath. The bill & answer were produced from the proper office:—Held: they were admissible in evidence.

(15) A pedigree "touching the name & families of Talbots," though proved to be in the handwriting of a former Garter King of Arms, not being shown to be a book kept by him in discharge of his duty in that office:—Held: inadmissible.

Sect. 7.—Claims to peerage: Sub-sect. 3, D. Parts II., III. & IV.]

(16) A visitation was produced from the proper office; the commission under which it was taken could not be found. The visitation purported to have been taken by deputation from Clarenceux King of Arms. The deputation was produced. It recited the commission, & the power therein contained for Clarenceux to appoint his deputies:—Held: the visitation was admissible in evidence.

(17) A record of a Royal warrant of precedence was produced from the Herald's Office; the original had been sought for at the Home Office, & the State Paper Office, but in vain. It was a part of the duty of the heralds to record such warrants. The record was received in evidence.

(18) W. erected in a church a monument to the memory of T., whom he described in the inscription thereon to have been his, W.'s father. The inscription had been put up after W. had been engaged in a controversy as to his relationship with C., but it did not directly relate to that controversy. It was admitted in evidence.

(19) It was necessary to prove that W. married M.; there was no certificate of marriage found, but the will of her uncle T. was produced. It was in these words: "All this I give to my nephew, W.," who was identified as the W. in question; and the Act Book from Doctors' Commons was produced, granting administration to "W. nephew, minor, & universal legatee." Received as proof that a marriage had taken place between W. & D.—SHREWSBURY (PEERAGE) CASE (1858), 7 H. L. Cas. 1; 11 E. R. 1, H. L.

(2) If he does not create him of some place, he shall not have an estate tail, but fee simple conditional, which shall be forfeited for felony.

(3) If he create him baronet of a place, then he shall have an estate-tail, within the Statute de Donis, 1285 (c. 1); & the King may grant to him & the heirs males of his body precedence before Knights Baronets, Knights of the Bath, & Knights Bachelors, & also may grant precedence to their wives, sons & daughters, etc., & he cannot create any dignity above the dignity of a baronet, & under the dignity of a baron; & the creation of his dignity of a baronet shall not discharge the heir to be in guard, as if the heir be made a knight, for he is not made knight by this, for the dignity of a knight is not descendible.—HONOURS & DIGINITIES, CREATION OF BARONETS (1612), 12 Co. When a dignity is limited to the heirs of the body, then although no place be named in the creation of the title, the dignity is within the Statute de Donis, 1285 (c. 1), & descendible as an estate tail, & the patent does not create a fee simple conditional. ## Part V.—Other Dignities.

319. Devolution of dignity upon co-heiresses—Performance of duties by deputy—Office of constable.]—CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND'S CASE (1514), Keil. 170; 72 E. R. 346.

320. ——— Office of Lord Great Chamberlain—Status of deputy.]—The office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England is hereditary; & where a person dies seised in fee of this office, leaving two sisters, the office belongs to both sisters, & they may execute it by deputy; but such deputy must be approved of by the King, & must not be of a degree inferior to a knight.—LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAIN'S CASE, Ex p. BURRELL (1781), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 146; 1 E. R. 850, H. L.

321. ——— Rule as to subsequent descent.]—CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND'S CASE (1514), Keil. 170; 72 E. R. 346.

322. Office of Standard Bearer of Scotland—Nature of office.]—The right to the office or dignity of Royal Standard Bearer of Scotland was established by the appellant since that office or title was granted jure sanguinis, & therefore, as there had been no failure of heirs who could have exercised the right, the alleged vesting of the office by an apprisement in the predecessor of resp. in 1670 was inoperative, because the office was neither feudal nor made alienable nor put in commercio by any Act of Parliament.—WEDDERBURN v. LAUDERDALE (EARL), [1910] A. C. 342; 26 T. L. R. 389; 54 Sol. Jo. 441, H. L.

323. Usher of White Rod in Scotland—Right to fees of honour—Titles of United Kingdom.]—By the Treaty of Union between England & Scotland it was provided, art. 20, "That all heritable offices . . . be reserved to the owners thereof as rights of property in the same manner as they are now enjoyed by the laws of Scotland notwithstanding this treaty":—Held: this treaty did not enlarge the rights of the holders of the heritable office of Usher of the White Rod in Scotland so as to entitle them to claim fees of honour from all recipients of honours whose titles were titles of the United Kingdom of Great Britain & Ireland; & the holders of the said heritable office were only entitled to fees from a Scotsman who received an honour or from an Englishman when he was the recipient of a purely Scottish honour.

The order of knighthood is not in any sense a local title. It is an order of chivalry recognisable in every part of the King's dominions, & differs in that respect altogether from an earldom conferred by the King as Sovereign of the Kingdom of Scotland (LORD ATKINSON).—LORD ADVOCATE v. WALKER TRUSTEES, [1912] A. C. 95; 106 L. T. 194; 28 T. L. R. 101, H. L.

Part I.—The Rule Against Perpetuities.

SECT. 1.—PERIOD ALLOWED FOR SUSPENSION OF VESTING.

SUB-SECT. 1.—THE RULE.

1. Statement of rule.]—An executory devise of an estate of inheritance to a person unborn when he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, is good; & there is no danger of a perpetuity.—STEBBENS v. STEPHENS (1736), Cas. temp. Talb. 228; 2 Barn. K. B. 375; 25 E. R. 751, L. C.

Astor*, [1922] 1 Ch. 364. Mentd. Smith v. Newport (1742), 2 Atk. 344; Lovell v. Lovell (1743), 3 Atk. 11; Hodgson v. Bective (1863), 1 Hon. & M. 376.

2. —.]—GOODTITLE d. GURNALL v. WOOD (1740), Willes, 211; 7 Term Rep. 103, n.; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 342; 125 E. R. 1136.

Annotations.—Consd. Doe v. Hutton (1804), 3 Bos. & P. 643; Cadell v. Palmer (1833), 1 Cl. & Fin. 372. Reid. Jones v. Roe (1789), 3 Term Rep. 88; Thellusson v. Woodford (1805), 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 357; Villar v. Gilbey (1806), 75 L. J. Ch. 308. Mentd. Goodright v. Forrester (1807), 8 East, 552.

3. —.]—Executory devise to the heirs of A's body, by a second husband on failure of issue by the first now living, too remote a contingency, & therefore void.

It is a future devise to take place after an indefinite failure of issue of the body of a former devisee, which far exceeds the allowed compass of a life or lives in being & twenty-one years after, which is the line now drawn & very sensibly & rightly drawn (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—GOODMAN v. GOODRIGHT (1759), 2 Burr. 873; 1 Wm. Bl. 188; 97 E. R. 608.

Annotations.—Reid. Doe v. Fonnereau (1780), 2 Doug. K. B. 487; Habergham v. Vincent (1792), 6 Term Rep. 92; Cadell v. Palmer (1833), 1 Cl. & Fin. 372.

4. —.]—It is not necessary to enter minutely into the history or reason of the law in setting bounds to the disposing power of every species of property in this kingdom: it may be sufficient to say, that the law, from an indulgence to the natural wishes of men to perpetuate their property in their own families, or the families they adopt, has given them a power of control over it for one or more lives in being at the same time, & twenty-one years after in case of infancy. But public convenience found constitutional policy & the spirit of liberty, which breathes through every part of our law, will not endure any species of property to be chained down any longer; & therefore, if testator meant, in this case, to lock up his leasehold & personal estate beyond his daughter's life, & that this bequest should hang like a cloud, to burst upon it, when there should be a failure of her issue "at any time after her death," his intention was an illegal one, & must yield to the law, & the bequest will be void. If, on the contrary, he intended, that this bequest over should take place upon the event of his daughter's dying without issue, "living at the time of her death," then his intention being confined to a life in being, is agreeable to the rules of law, & the bequest over will be a good one; & therefore the question proposed strikes at the true point of this case. When did testator intend this bequest over should take effect? For once fix that intention, & the law decides upon it without the least ambiguity (per CUR.).—KEILEY v. FOWLER (1768), Wilm. 298; 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 299; 97 E. R. 115, H. L.

Annotations.—Consd. Bigge v. Bensley (1783), 1 Bro. C. C. 188. Reid. Doe v. Lyde (1787), 1 Term Rep. 593; Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick (1807), 13 Ves. 476; Campbell v. Harding (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 390; Garratt v. Cockerell (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 494. Mentd. Pye v. Linwood (1842), 6 Jur. 618; Harris v. Davis (1844), 1 Coll. 416; Turner v. Frampton (1846), 2 Coll. 331.

5. —.]—In Stephens v. Stephens, No. 1, ante, the ct. took a large stride of twenty-one years after a life in being. The argument was, that this would not create a perpetuity. Former cases had said, a limitation might be made to take effect on the death of a person in esse, or the birth of a posthumous child, & alienation was not restrained for any longer time in Stephens v. Stephens, No. 1, ante, for, if a devise could hold to a posthumous child, there could be no alienation till he should attain the age of twenty-one (LORD MANSFIELD, C.J.).—DOE v. FONNEREAU (1780), 2 Doug. K. B. 487; 99 E. R. 311.

Annotation.—Reid. Doe d. Scott v. Roach (1816), 5 M. & S. 482.

6. —.]—JEE v. AUDLEY, No. 15, post.

7. —.]—A power to appoint among children does not extend to grandchildren. The appointment being had under the power, the party taking benefit of it not obliged to make satisfaction out of the personal estate, which he took under the same will.—ROBINSON v. HARDCASTLE (1788), 2 Bro. C. C. 344; 29 E. R. 193, L. C.

Annotations.—Reid. Houtledge v. Dorrl (1794), 2 Ves. 357; Crompe v. Barrow (1799), 4 Ves. 681; Brudenell v. Elwes (1801), 1 East, 442; Bray v. Bree (1834), 3 *Bl. N. 8. —.]—THELLUSSON v. WOODFORD, No. 67, post.

9. —.]—(1) Testator being entitled to leasehold premises for terms of years, bequeathed them to trustees, on trust to permit his grandson, B., to take the profits thereof during his life, & after his decease to permit such person, who for the time being would take by descent as heir male of the body of the B., his grandson, to take the profits thereof until some such person should attain the age of twenty-one years, & then to convey the same to such person so attaining that age, his exors., administrators, & assigns; but if no such person should live to attain the age of twenty-one, then in trust to permit such person & persons successively, who for the time being would take by descent as heirs male of the body of testator's son, father of B., to take the profits of the same leasehold premises until one of them should attain the age of twenty-one, & then to convey the same to such heir male first attaining that age, his exors., administrators, &

Sect. 1.—Period allowed for suspension of vesting :
Sub-sects. 1 & 2, A.]

assigns. At the death of B., the grandson, his son & heir, A., had attained the age of twenty-one, & entered into possession of the leasehold premises. Upon a bill filed against him by the next of kin of testator:—Held: A. had not a good title to the leaseholds; the bequest to the heir male of the grandson attaining twenty-one was void for remoteness, & therefore, the next of kin of testator, at his death, became entitled to their distributive shares of the property on the death of the grandson.

(2) Where a testator has made a general bequest, one having a number of objects, there is no authority for holding that a ct. can so mould it as to say that it is divisible into two classes, the one embracing the lawful, & the other the unlawful objects of his bounty.

... It has been contended that, in applying this doctrine to the present case, we are unwarrantably adopting principles from the cases of gifts to classes of persons, such as children, brothers, or the like, & which have not been & ought not to be applied to a case where there is no gift to a class to take together, but rather several gifts to a series of persons, who are to take in succession one after the other. There does not appear to me to be any ground for this distinction (ROFFE, B.).

(3) Our first duty is to construe the will; & this we must do, exactly in the same way as if the rule against perpetuity had never been established, or were repealed when the will was made (PARKE, B.).

(4) It is not sufficient that it may vest within that period; it must be good in its creation, & unless it is created in such terms that it cannot vest after the expiration of a life or lives in being, & twenty-one years & the period allowed for gestation, it is not valid, & subsequent events cannot make it so (CRESSWELL, J.).

If, at the time of its creation, the limitation is so framed, as not, ex necessitate, to take effect within the prescribed period, that is, if it is bad in its inception, it will not become valid by reason of the happening of subsequent events which may bring the time of actual vesting & taking effect within the period prescribed by law (TINDAL, C.J.).—DUNNANON (LORD) v. SMITH (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 546; 10 Jur. 721; 8 E. R. 1523, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. KER v. DUNNANON (LORD) (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 509, L. C.

10. —.]—BLAGROVE v. HANCOCK, No. 19, post.

11. —.]—Where a fund was given to a person for life, & after her decease to her children, but accompanied, as to daughters or female issue, with a restraint on anticipation:—Held: the restraint was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities.

The Chancellors established this rule in favour of alienation; that property could not be tied up longer than for a life in being & twenty-one years after. That is called the rule against perpetuities (JESSEL, M.R.).

The law does not recognise dispositions which would practically make property inalienable for ever (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re RIDLEY, BUCKTON v. HAY (1879), 11 Ch. D. 645; 48 L. J. Ch. 563; 41 L. T. 336; 43 J. P. 588; 27 W. R. 527.

12. —.]—(1) Testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his wife for life, & after her decease upon trusts for the benefit of his brother C. & his present & future issue as his wife should appoint. The wife appointed the property in trust for C. for life & after his death for all his children who had attained or should attain the age of twenty-five years if born in her lifetime or twenty-one years if born after her decease. C. had nine children only all of whom were born in the lifetime of original testator, & all of whom had attained twenty-five before the death of the appointor:—Held: upon the appointment taking effect it was certain that within the limits of perpetuity not only would the persons to take be ascertained but their interests would be vested & the amount of their shares fixed; & consequently that the appointment was valid.

(2) The rule against perpetuities requires that every estate or interest must vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after the determination of some life in being at the time of the creation of such estate or interest, & not only must the person to take be ascertained, but the amount of his interest must be ascertained within the prescribed period (JOYCE, J.).

(3) The period within which estates & interests limited by the appointment made in exercise of a special power must vest does not begin from the death of the person exercising the power, but, if such power was created by a will, from the death of the original testator (JOYCE, J.).

(4) When it is stated in Jarman on Wills (5th ed. Vol. I. p. 259) that the test by which the validity of such a gift as that which I have had to consider must be tried is to read it as inserted in the deed or will creating the power in the place of the powers it is not meant that the precise language of the instrument exercising the power in the present case the will of M. is to be read into the instrument creating it, viz. the will of C.

The will of M. [the wife] was an ambulatory document having no force or effect whatever until her death (JOYCE, J.).—Re THOMPSON, THOMPSON v. THOMPSON, [1906] 2 Ch. 199; 75 L. J. Ch. 599; 95 L. T. 97; 54 W. R. 613.

15. —]—(1) Testator gave £1,000 to M. & the issue of her body & in default of such issue he gave the £1,000 to be equally divided between the daughters then living of J. & E., his wife. This devise takes in daughters of J. & E. born after testator's death, & therefore the limitation is too remote.

The limitations of personal estate are void unless they necessarily vest, if at all, within a life or lives in being, & twenty-one years or nine or ten months afterwards (KENYON, M.R.).

The question before me is, not whether the limitation is good in the events which have happened, but whether it was good in its creation (KENYON, M.R.).

Testator then declared that his residuary estate should be divided among his pecuniary & particular legatees in proportion to the particular legacies. A. claimed to retain the £1,000 on the ground that the legacy was void as being too remote; & the residuary legatees claimed it according to their shares of the residue:—Held: (1) the legacy was void, as given upon a trust which might continue for more than a life in being & twenty-one years.

M. & E. survived testatrix. The longest liver of M., E. & their children left a will by which she purported to appoint the property. The heir-at-law of H. claimed the property as undisposed of. The trustees of the will of H. took out an originating summons to have it decided to whom they ought to convey the property. At the request of the parties the Ct. of Appeal consented to decide the construction of the will, & held that as the person to exercise the power of appointment was not necessarily ascertainable within a life or lives in being & twenty-one years, the power was void, & the property on the death of the survivor of

M. & E. & their children went as undisposed of to the heir-at-law.

I must say a few words as to Avern v. Lloyd, No. 257, post, which is very like the present case. The Vice-Chancellor there says that . . . there may be a limitation of valid life estates to the unborn children. . . .

It may be contended that as the alienation of the estate is not prevented the case is not within the rule as to remoteness. But that is not the true way of looking at it. An executory limitation to take effect on the happening of an event which may not take place within a life in being & twenty-one years, is not made valid by the fact that the person in whose favour it is made can release it (COTTON, L.J.).—*Re HARGREAVES, MIDGLEY v. The exact position of the piece of land so excepted was not in any way defined either by boundaries or colour so as to distinguish it from the rest of the land described in the conveyance & plan. Subsequently the purchaser, who had bought the estate for building purposes, prepared a road plan showing a strip of land 40 feet in width the site for a road extending from the point A on the plan to the conveyance to an intended road, also shown on the road plan & afterwards completed, & which was the "nearest road" to the point A. This was said to operate as an election by the purchaser defining the "40 feet" piece & so making the uncertain exception certain:—Held: the "40 feet" piece so said to have been defined had not been effectually excepted from the conveyance (a) because the conveyance operated at common law & not under the Statute of Uses, 1535 (c. 10), so that the exception, being in the nature of a limitation of an estate of freehold to commence in futuro, was bad; & (b) because, even if the conveyance could be held to operate under the Statute of Uses, 1535 (c. 10), the exception was bad as infringing the rule against perpetuities, since any election necessary to give effect to the exception might not be made, according to the terms of the conveyance, until after the "nearest road" had been made by the purchaser or his assignee, an event not necessarily occurring within the period prescribed by the rule.

The law, which admits of a strict settlement, admits that the corpus of the estate may be inalienable for centuries, by reason of disabilities which the law imposes. But it is another question whether the settlor may superadd a disability by making that also inalienable for centuries, the enjoyment of which by law is not suspended for an hour. It is material, in considering questions like these, to bear in mind that, although, by force of a strict settlement, which the law allows, the corpus of the estate may be rendered inalienable for an indefinite time, the rents & profits are in a course of uninterrupted enjoyment & distribution as part of the personal estate of the tenant for life, though an infant; & this observation applies as well to the timber growing on the estate of an infant tenant in tail, as to the other profits of the estate (WIGRAM, V.-C.).

It is admitted on all hands, that the validity of the limitations in a will must be determined at the death of testator (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—FERRAND v. WILSON (1845), 4 Hare, 344; 15 L. J. Ch. 41; 9 Jur. 860; 67 E. R. 680.

After R.'s death, J. died without issue, & the remainder to R.'s sons, under N.'s will took effect:—Held: the interest of R.'s representative in the term was not defeated, the proviso being bad for remoteness: for that, even if the proviso could be construed as contemplating independent alternatives, namely, the devolution of the estates comprised in N.'s will either to R. or to his issue male, still the alternative limitation under which alone, in the event, the proviso could operate, was the devolution to R.'s issue male, which alternative limitation was originally bad for remoteness.—HARDING v. 46. ———.]—Whether necessary when persons ascertained.]—Testator bequeathed five leasehold houses, having about fifty-four years to run, to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children. After the expiration of any of the leases, he directed his trustees to convey to his daughter & her children one or more of his five freehold houses of equal annual value, or as near as could be, to the expired leasehold:—Held: the devise was neither invalid for remoteness nor uncertainty.

The objection is that the gift is too remote:

the persons, however, who are to take are all ascertained, they are M. Wood & her children, & therefore are persons who were all either living at testator's death, or who would be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life. Then it is said that if you cannot ascertain accurately the interests of the parties in the subject-matter within a life or lives in being twenty-one years afterwards the whole gift fails. . . . But the error in this reasoning lies in this: that it is not a question of remoteness at all, but a question of uncertainty; it amounts to this, that if you cannot ascertain the amount of a gift, you cannot carry it into effect, though persons to take are ascertained & are in esse. It is necessary to distinguish between remoteness & uncertainty (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WOOD v. DREW (1864), 33 Beav. 610; 55 E. R. 505.

In Mar. 1853, C. being owner of buildings subject to mtges., executed a deed declaring that he held the property upon trust for sale, & for division, after certain payments, of the surplus proceeds into three equal parts, of which he should retain one, & should pay the other two to other persons. In Aug. 1853, C. assigned his one-third share to a purchaser, reserving to himself, in the event of the sale moneys exceeding £85,000, one-tenth of the difference between the actual amount of the one-third share & the amount it would have been if the sale moneys had been £85,000 only. The property was sold in 1898 by the then trustees of the deed of Mar. 1853, for much more than £85,000, & £4,500 was set aside by them to answer the claim of the representative of C., who had died. It was alleged by the parties interested, other than the representative of C., that the persons for the time being entitled to the rents & profits of the buildings had before the sale spent large sums in lasting improvements thereof, & they claimed that certain India Stock, then representing the sum of £4,500, should contribute a proportionate part of the expenditure on these improvements. The trustees brought an action asking for a declaration of the ct. upon the validity of the reservation & of the claim for contribution:—Held: the reservation did not infringe the rule against perpetuities, & was valid.—Re COULSON'S TRUSTS, PRICHARD v. D. Alienee under Disability.

50. General rule—Personal incapacity disregarded.]—(1) Testator devised four estates, three of which he settled to uses in strict settlement under which an infant was now tenant in tail of the O. estate. The fourth estate he limited to trustees for a term of one thousand years upon trust out of the rents & profits to discharge the incumbrances upon all the estates in a certain order, & subject thereto he settled the estate to the uses of the two estates other than the C. estate. The will contained a provision as to each estate that if any person who, if the provision had not been inserted therein, would for the time being be entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents & profits of such estate as tenant for life or in tail should be under the age of twenty-one years, then & in such case & as often as the same should happen, the trustees of the will should enter into possession or receipt of the rents & profits of the estate, & should during the minority of such person keep up the mansion house & manage the property, with power (inter alia) to hold manorial cts. & accept surrenders of leases; & should maintain the infant, & apply the surplus rents & profits in the same way as those of the fourth estate. Upon an originating summons to determine the validity of the minority clause:—Held: there was no necessity for implying any estate at all in the trustees, for without any such estate they could enter & take possession & exercise the powers entrusted to them, & the mere inclusion in those powers of one, that of holding manorial cts., which could not be exercised without their having the legal estate did not operate so as to change the whole character of the settlement. At most it was only a power, & not a trust, to do something which the law would not allow. The minority clause was therefore valid.

(2) When the ct. is asked to read a clause into a will by implication it is asked to construe the will so as to give effect to the real intention of testator implicitly contained in, but not expressed in terms by, the words of the will. It is possible that testator may have intended to infringe the rule against perpetuities, but the ct. would not insert words having that effect unless it was absolutely unavoidable (FARWELL, L.J.)

(3) It is well settled that limitations to A. for life with remainder to his first & other sons in tail were as valid at common law as under Statute of Uses, 1535 (c. 10). . . . The barrable nature of the estate tail was held sufficient & the cts provided against such risk of perpetuity as they considered incident to an estate tail by requiring a particular estate of freehold to support contingent remainders & by forbidding limitations to the unborn child of an unborn child. . . . If then the barrable nature of estates tail renders them free from any objection on the ground of perpetuity notwithstanding the infancy of tenants in tail, no power of entry which is called into existence in respect of & is limited in duration to the continuance of the infancy of the tenant in tail can be obnoxious to the rule (FARWELL, L.J.).

(4) The trusts of the term are not altogether void. So far as the trust is for payment of debts, it is good (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

fee; & it was directed, that the trustees should stand seised, upon the failure of male lineal descendants of A. B. & C. as aforesaid, upon trust to sell, & pay the produce to His Majesty, his heirs, & successors, to the use of the Sinking Fund; the accumulation, till the purchases or sales can take place, to go to the same purpose; with a direction, that all the persons becoming entitled shall use the surname of testator only. The decree, establishing the trusts of the will, was affirmed by the House of Lords upon appeal.

Property may be so limited as to make it unalienable during any number of lives, not exceeding that to which testimony can be applied to determine when the survivor drops.

It is competent to a testator to give a life estate, to be appointed by the survivor of a thousand persons (LORD ELDON, C.).

(2) The first objection to the will is, that testator has exceeded that portion of time, within which the contingency must happen, upon which an executory devise is permitted to be limited by the rules of law (MACDONALD, C.B.).

(3) With an easy interpretation we find from LORD NOTTINGHAM what that tendency to a perpetuity is, which the policy of the law has considered as a public inconvenience; namely, where an executory devise would have the effect of making lands unalienable beyond the time which is allowed in legal limitations; that is, beyond the time at which one in remainder would attain his age of twenty-one, if he were not born when the limitations were executed (MACDONALD, C.B.).

(4) It appears, then, that the co-existing lives at the expiration of which the contingency must happen, are not confined to any definite number. . . . The usual test, whether they will or will not tend to a perpetuity, by rendering it almost, if not quite impracticable to ascertain the extinction of the lives described (MACDONALD, C.B.).

(5) If the estates for life had been given to the several cestui que vie in this will, & after their deaths to their children, either born or en ventre sa mère at testator's death, they would have been good. No tendency to perpetuity then can arise in the case of such lives being taken, not to confer in them a measure of beneficial interest, but to fix the time, during which the vesting of the property which is the subject of this devise shall be protracted; inasmuch as the circulation of real property is no more fettered in one case than in the other (MACDONALD, C.B.).—THELLUSSON v. WOODFORD (1805), 11 Ves. 112; 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 357; 32 E. R. 1030, H. L.; affg. (1799), 4 Ves. 227.

Testatrix devised real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to M. during her life, & after her death to stand possessed of the corpus upon trust for the second & every younger son of M., "born or to be born" successively, during his life, with remainder, after the death of each such son, upon trust for his first & other sons, successively, in tail male.

Testatrix died in Oct. 1880, at which date M. had had a son who died in 1887, a son who was disqualified by the will from taking under the limitations, & she was pregnant of a third son, S., who was born in Feb. 1881. M. died in 1886, S. being then still living:—Held: the limitations after S.'s life estate were valid as not transgressing the rule against perpetuities.

Blasson*, No. 646, post.

(2) A testator by his will devised real estate in strict settlement to his brother's first & second sons, who were alive at the date of the will, successively for life, with remainder to their first

The brother's third son was born three weeks after testator's death. The first & second sons died without issue:—Held: the third son took an estate tail, not having been born in testator's lifetime.

(3) The cases in class two establish this, that in construing the rule [against perpetuities] a child en ventre may be deemed to be a "life in being," & the period of gestation may be added at both ends of the period of twenty-one years mentioned in the rule (LORD ATKINSON).—VILLAR v. The only ground upon which I am pressed to limit the construction of the word "heirs" or "issue" to grandchildren of testator was the consequence to which it would lead, viz. that it would or might lead to a decision that the limitation at the expiration of the term of fifty years was void for remoteness. That, I apprehend, is not a sufficient reason for departing from the plain meaning of testator's words (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—SPEAKMAN v. SPEAKMAN (1850), 8 Hare, 180; 68 E. R. 323.

At the date of testator's death forty-nine years of the term created by the lease were unexpired:—Held: although the trust for sale was void for remoteness, the legatees of the proceeds of sale were, notwithstanding, entitled to the benefits intended by testator, inasmuch as in equity they were entitled to take the house as real estate.—Re DAVERON, BOWEN v. BOUGHTON v. BOUGHTON, BOUGHTON v. JAMES, No. 758, post.

91. ———.] — SPEAKMAN v. SPEAKMAN, No. 86, ante.

92. ———.] — Testatrix, by her will, devised her estates to a son, charged with £1,000, payable to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to her daughter for life, & after her decease, upon trust to dispose thereof unto or amongst the child & children of her daughter, to be a vested interest or vested interests on their respectively attaining the age of thirty years; & testatrix declared that, if any child or children of her daughter should die under the age of thirty years without lawful issue, the share or shares of him, her or them so dying, as well original as accruing by survivorship, should go to the survivors or survivor, in equal shares if more than one, & become vested at such ages or times as his, her or their original share or shares. The daughter had two children, one, who died in her lifetime, aged twenty-seven years; & another, who survived her, & attained the age of thirty years:—Held: the word "vested" was used in the sense of "not subject to be divested" or "indefeasible"; & the bequest of the £1,000 after the decease of the daughter, to her child & children, was a valid bequest creating a vested interest in the children who survived her, & the representatives of the child who died in her lifetime; & the gift over only was void for remoteness.

In considering this question, the ct. lays out of sight the circumstances that, if one construction be adopted, the disposition in favour of A.'s children will be void for remoteness, while according to the other construction, the dispositions will in a great measure be supported.

The ct. in such cases first ascertain what the provisions of the instrument are, by applying to it the ordinary rules of construction, & it then determines to what extent the provisions thus ascertained are in accordance with the rules of law (PARKER, V.-C.).—TAYLOR v. 94. ———.] — DUNGANNON (LORD) v. SMITH, No. , ante.

95. ———.] — (1) Testator devised estate A. to B. for life, & after his decease to & among all the children of B. during their natural lives in equal shares; & from & after the death of any or either of such child or children, he gave the share if him or her so dying unto his or their child or children lawfully to be begotten, & to his or their heirs for ever as tenants in common; & in case 3. should die without leaving a child or children, grandchild or grandchildren, then he gave the estate to C. — Held: every child of B. alive at the time of the death of testator took an estate for life in his or her share, with remainder to his or her children in fee; & every child of B. who was born after the death of testator took a life interest in his or her share, but the remainder in fee to his or her children was too remote, & went to the heir-at-law of testator under the intestacy.

You cannot give the whole property to those who are in fact ascertained within the period, & might have taken if the gift had been to them nominatim, because they were intended to take in shares to be regulated in amount, augmented or diminished according to the number of the other members of the class, & not to take exclusively of those other members (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).

(2) The second rule is, that you must ascertain the objects of testator's bounty, by construing his will without any reference to the rules of law which prohibit remote limitations; & having, apart from any consideration of the effect of those rules in supporting or destroying the claim, arrived at the true construction of the will, you are then to apply the rules of law as to perpetuities to the objects so ascertained (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).

(3) The fifth & last rule is that where there is a gift or desire of a given sum or property to each member of a class & the gift to each is wholly independent of the same or similar gift to every other member of the class & cannot be augmented or diminished whatever be the number of the other members, then the gift may be good as to those within the limits allowed by the law (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).

(4) If the devise be to . . . a series of single individuals answering a given description & any one member of the series intended to take may by possibility be a person excluded by the rule as to remoteness, then no person whatever can take, because the testator has expressed his intention to exclude all, & not to give to one excluding others (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.). —CATLIN v. 97. —[I think it is the duty of a judge . . . to construe the instrument in a proper way, to arrive at its meaning independently of the results, & then apply the law. This has been laid down over & over again with regard to another rule of law—the rule against remoteness or perpetuity (JESSEL, M.R.).—CUNLIFFE v. BRANCKER (1876), 3 Ch. D. 393; 46 L. J. 98. —[(1) In ascertaining whether a bequest falls within the rule against remoteness, the words of testator are first to be taken, & their meaning determined; & it is then to be considered whether that meaning brings them within the operation of the rule.

You do not import the law of remoteness into the construction of the instrument, by which you investigate the expressed intention of testator. You take his words & endeavour to arrive at their meaning exactly in the same manner as if there had been no such law, & as if the whole intention expressed by the words could lawfully take effect (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(2) The vice of remoteness affects a class as a whole, 'if it may affect an unascertained number of its members.

A gift is said to be to a class of persons when it is to all those who shall come within a certain category or description defined by a general or collective formula, & who, if they take at all are to take one divisible subject in certain proportionate shares; & the rule is that the vice of remoteness affects the class as a whole, if it may affect an unascertained number of its members (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(3) In a devise to a class, if all the shares would necessarily be ascertained within due limits of time, it would be immaterial that in a later part of the will there were found, as to some particular shares, superadded conditions which might or might not be void by reason of remoteness. If you could find in this will a gift simply to all the children of testator's daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years . . . & the lawful issue of such of them as shall die under that age leaving lawful issue at his, her, or their death or respective deceases . . . no doubt there would be no remoteness (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

A will contained a bequest of a particular sum of £3,000 to testator's daughter & her husband for life, & after their deaths "my will is that the sum of £3,000, the securities for the same, & the produce thereof, shall be in trust for all the children of my said daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, & the lawful issue of such of them as shall die under that age, leaving lawful issue at his, her, or their death or respective deceases, which issue shall afterwards attain the age of twenty-one years, or die under that age, having issue at his, or their death or deceases respectively, as tenants in common if more than one, but such to take only the share or shares which his, her, or their parent or parents respectively would have taken if living." A life interest in another sum of £3,000 was given to the son, with exactly the same trusts for his issue; in default, over:—Held: the bequest was void for remoteness; the bequest being to a class, the parts of it could not be severed, so as to treat one portion as good, though the other was void.—PEARKS v. MOSELEY, Re MOSELEY'S TRUSTS (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714; 50 L. J. Ch. 57; 43 L. T. 449; 29 W. R. 1, H. L.

The only two children of the marriage were L., born in 1846, & A., born in 1852. G. died in 1877, having by her will devised that the yearly income of the settled estate should be equally divided "during their respective lives between my daughters L. & A.," & that "in the event of the death of either the survivor shall receive the whole income," & that on her death the estate should be sold & the proceeds divided among the children of L. & A.:—Held: the gift to the survivor was a contingent & not a vested estate, & as the survivor might be a person not ascertainable within twenty-one years from the death of G., the gift was void as contravening the rule against perpetuities.

Construction of wills, generally, see WILLS.

106. Construction avoiding perpetuity preferred.]—Cts. will avoid a construction leading to a perpetuity & void devise, if possible. So they will, in marriage settlements, consider the general intent as in favour of the issue described, & not let property revert, or go to a father as the representative of one child to the prejudice of the rest, if no positive reason for it to be clearly inferred.—EXEL v. 107. —Will admitting of two constructions—Intention expressed in will.]—The phrase in a will "estate tail in possession" does not necessarily mean actual possession, but may be construed as meaning entitled to a vested estate tail in the property, though it may be vested in remainder & the party entitled may not be in actual possession, a previous life estate existing at the time. There may be a particular clause in a will which on one construction appears to offend against the law relating to perpetuities, but it if is fairly capable of another construction which avoids that objection, the latter construction will be preferred, especially if it is found to be in accordance with the general intention of the will. Where there has been a decree, all the parties interested being before the ct., long acquiesced in, which declared a direction for accumulation to be void for remoteness, but also declared that the will was well executed, & the trusts thereof, except that direction, ought to be carried into effect, the presumption will be that a possible objection to a similar clause in the will had not been overlooked, but had been considered & decided on before the declaration to carry the trusts of the will into execution was made.

It is not improper to take into consideration that in the whole of the will he [testator] has carefully provided that the limitation of his estates shall not be open to the objection of being contrary to that law, [against remoteness] & if the clause in question is capable of two constructions, one of which would render it void upon a ground which testator throughout his will seems to have been anxiously guarding against, & the other of which is reconcilable with all his previously expressed intentions, there can be no doubt which of them ought to be adopted (LORD CHELMSFORD). —MARTELLI v. 108. —.]—Where land is devised to an unborn person for life with remainder to his children in tail or to his sons in tail male, the ct. under the doctrine of cy-près will give legal effect to the general intention of testator by treating the life estate as an estate tail or an estate tail male, as the case may be; but, except in the case of an executory trust, in which a greater latitude is allowed in moulding the provisions of the will, the doctrine will only be applied in this manner; & the ct. will not construe a will cy-près if the result is to include as an object of testator's bounty any person whom he intended to exclude, or to exclude any person whom he intended to include.

Devise of real estate to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of the first & every other son of A. successively for life, remainder to the use of the first & every other son of that son successively in tail male, remainder to the use of the daughters of each of A.'s sons as tenants in common in tail with cross-remainders, the daughters of each elder son to take before the daughters of the younger sons remainder to the use of A.'s daughters as tenants in common in tail with cross-remainders, remainder to the use of A. in fee simple. A. survived testator & died a bachelor. The limitations after A.'s life estate being void as they stood for remoteness, it was proposed, in order to give effect to the general intention of testator without including in the devise the class of persons omitted by him, namely, daughters of sons' sons, to substitute under the doctrine of cy-près a series of limitations in tail differing in form from the original limitations & involving the introduction of a contingent remainder:—Held: the doctrine of cy-près was not applicable, & the ultimate limitation to A. in fee simple failed.—*Re MORTIMER, GRAY v. 109. —.]—In considering whether the trusts of a will are void for perpetuity the ct. must first construe the gifts according to the ordinary canons of construction, & then consider whether any part of it, as so construed, offends against the perpetuity rule & it cannot construe the gift otherwise than according to its natural meaning because, if so construed it would offend against the rule, though possibly, if the gifts might equally well be construed in two ways, one only of which would offend against the rule, the ct. might adopt the other construction.

111. ——— No reference to rule in will—No contrary presumption raised.—Testator bequeathed freeholds to trustees & their heirs, to the use of his nephew for life, remainder to the use of his first son in tail male, with remainders over. He gave to the same trustees leaseholds, in trust for such person or persons as should for the time being be entitled to the several freehold hereditaments thereinbefore devised, to the end that the said leaseholds might go along with, & be held & enjoyed by the person or persons who, for the time being, should be entitled to the said freehold hereditaments, so far as the nature of the said leaseholds, & the rules of law & equity, would permit; but no person taking an estate tail by purchase in the freeholds was, for the purpose of transmission to representatives, to become absolutely entitled to the leaseholds until twenty-one. He devised to the same trustees & their heirs copyholds upon trust to permit & suffer the same to be held & enjoyed by such person or persons as for the time being should become seised of or entitled unto any estate of freehold, or inheritance of & in the said freehold hereditaments for & during so long time as the rules of law & equity would permit. Power was reserved by the will to certain persons to cut timber; & the trusts of the timber money, when invested, were declared to be, to pay the income to such person or persons as for the time being would be entitled to the rents & profits of the freehold hereditaments. Testator further directed his trustees, out of his personalty, to set apart £10,000, & invest the remainder, after payment of his debts, & pay the dividends & interest thereof from time to time as the same should become due & be received, unto such person or persons as for the time being should be entitled to the rents & profits of his freehold hereditaments thereinbefore devised; & in case of failure of the issue of certain persons, upon trust to transfer what should remain of the personal estate to a college.—Held: the personal estate vested absolutely in the first tenant in tail.

The ct. will look to the general intention of a testator that the personal estate shall go with the realty, rather than to an apparent intention on his part to limit the personalty to an extent not permitted by law.

He does not advert to the state of the law, but it does not follow that on that account the ct. will see an intention to violate the rule against perpetuities; it will rather see an intention to give the property to the owner of the first estate of inheritance (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—Re JOHN-

113. Personalty limited by reference to limitations of realty—Limitations cut down not to offend rule.—Testatrix devised a reversion in real estate upon trust for C. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail, & directed her trustees to stand possessed of £2,000 to apply the dividends in the repair of the property at the request of the person in possession. Testatrix died. C. was the tenant for life of the property by a title prior to the will of testatrix, & had a grandson who died in his father's lifetime. C. then died leaving a son, pltf., who then became first tenant in tail in possession.—Held: pltf. was entitled to the fund.

Where a testator gives real estate by a series of limitations & afterwards gives chattels by a mere general reference to go according to the limitations of the real estate as long as the rules of law & equity will permit, a ct. of equity will not deviate from the limitations of the real estate in order to tie up the personalty along with it if the testator has so moulded the limitations of the real estate as not to fit the case of personalty. It will not cut down the interest of the tenant in tail; it will only cut down the operation upon the personalty of the words used in limiting the real estate, so as to avoid offending against the rule as to perpetuities (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—COX v. SUTTON (1856), 25 L. J. Ch. 845; 28 L. T. O. S. 119; 2 Jur. N. S. 733.

of real estate, namely, that although an estate may be limited to an unborn person for his life, yet a remainder cannot be limited to the children of that unborn person, as purchasers, is still existing, & has not been abrogated by the more modern rule against perpetuities, which prohibits property being tied up for a longer period than a life or lives in being & twenty-one years afterwards, with the addition of the period of an actually existing gestation—the two rules being in fact independent & co-existing.

[ By a post-nuptial settlement made in pursuance of ante-nuptial arts., freehold lands were limited to the use of the husband & wife successively for life, with remainder to the use of their issue, born before any appointment made, as they should by deed appoint. Having had issue, two daughters only, they by deed appointed one moiety of the lands to the use of one daughter for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, & after her decease to the use of such person or persons as she should by will appoint, & in default of appointment to the use of her children living at the date of that deed equally as tenants in common in fee:—Held: the only part of the appointment which was good was the limitation to the daughter for life for her separate use; the appointment being read into the settlement, & the latter being treated as having been made prior to the marriage of the husband & wife.

129. Whether subject to rule.—NORFOLK'S (DUKE) CASE, HOWARD v. NORFOLK (DUKE), No. 181, post.

130. —.] — (1) Testator, who died in 1870, by his will dated the same year devised a freehold estate to the use of his sons & their heirs during the life of his daughter E., upon trusts for such daughter; & after her decease "to the use of any husband whom she may hereafter marry" during his life; & after the death of the survivor of his daughter & such husband, to the use of the children of his daughter as she should appoint & in default of such appointment to the use of all the children of his daughter who should be living at the death of the survivor of her & her husband, or should have previously died leaving issue then living, in equal shares; but in case no child of his daughter should be living at the death of such survivor or should have previously died/leaving issue then living, then to the use of such of his sons & of his other daughters as should be then living, or should have previously died leaving issue then living, in equal shares. The will contained a gift of residue. The daughter E. was a spinster at testator's death, but subsequently, in 1872 married & died shortly afterwards without issue. Her husband died in 1888:—Held: the limitations subsequent to the life estate of the daughter's husband were void for remoteness & on his death the devised estate passed under the residuary gift.

(2) But they [contingent remainders] were subject, before this rule was invented, to another rule which was thus expressed in the old legal language, that you cannot limit a possibility upon a possibility & the familiar illustration is that you cannot limit by way of legal devise or conveyance to A., an existing person, for life, with remainder to his unborn son for life, with remainder to the children of that unborn son. That last remainder was void. . . . I think there is no question that this is the law to this day (KAY, J.).

(3) I do not at all agree that under the law of the present day there cannot be any application of the rule against perpetuities to remainders. I find in Fearne on Contingent Remainders, in the edition already referred to [10th edition, p. 502] this statement of the law: "Here indeed it may not be improper to remark, once for all, that any limitation in future, or by way of remainder, of lands of inheritance, which in its nature tends to a perpetuity, even although there be a preceding vested freehold, so as to take it out of the description of an executory devise, is by our cts. considered void in its creation." Here, then, is a clear statement of the law in a book of great authority, that the rule against remoteness will be applied to contingent remainders as well as to contingent limitations by way of executory devise (KAY, J.).—Re FROST, FROST v. FROST (1889), 43 Ch. D. 246; 59 L. J. Ch. 118; 62 L. T. 25; 38 W. R. 264.

(c) Common Law Conditions.

133. General rule—Subject to rule.—By indentures of lease & release of May 18, 1726, certain hereditaments were assured to one J. to have & to hold unto said J. his heirs & assigns to the use of one T., & certain other persons therein named, being the trustees of a charity known as H.'s Hospital upon the trusts therein mentioned for the maintenance & management of the hospital, subject to the following proviso: "Provided always, & it is hereby agreed by & between parties to these presents that if, at any time hereafter the premises hereby conveyed or any part thereof, or the rents, profits, & issues of the same, or of any part thereof, shall be employed or converted to or for any other use or uses, interest or purposes then as are hereinbefore mentioned & specified, then & from thenceforth the buildings, lands, & premises hereinbefore conveyed to the uses & upon the trusts hereinbefore mentioned shall revert to the right heirs of T., party hereto, anything herein contained to the contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding." E. had entered into a contract with an agent acting for the majority of the trustees of the charity for the purchase of a portion of the freehold property. E. was willing to accept the title & a draft conveyance had been approved, when one of the trustees wrote to H.'s sons, stating in effect that, as heir-at-law of T. he had not concurred in the sale of the property & calling attention to the above proviso in the title deeds. E. took out this summons against the trustees asking for a declaration that a good title had not been shown to the hereditaments contracted to be sold:—Held: (1) the proviso constituted a common law condition subsequent; (2) the rule against perpetuities applied to such a condition; (3) the title was not one which should be forced on a purchaser.

If the clause in question ought to be construed as a limitation or as creating a shifting or springing use, it would be void as infringing the rule against perpetuities (BYRNE, J.).—Re HOLLIS' HOSPITAL TRUSTEES & HAGUE'S CONTRACT, [1899] 2 Ch. 540; 68 L. 134. ———.—[Held:]—Testator devised all his real estate at Adelaide, South Australia, to trustees upon trust during the lives of successive tenants for life to apply the income in a particular manner, & on the falling in of the last life tenancy to convey the said real estate to the council of the Church of England Collegiate School of St. Peter, Adelaide. But this disposition was made on the express condition that the council published annually a statement of payments & receipts, & in case of default for six calendar months in the publication of such statement, the disposition in favour of the collegiate school was thenceforth to cease & to go over to & enure for the sole benefit of such person or persons & for such public purposes as the Governor in Chief of South Australia should in writing direct:—Held: the gift over & the condition were both bad, the former not being a good charitable gift & the latter being a common law condition subsequent, working a forfeiture on the condition coming into operation, & obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities; the council of the collegiate school were entitled to a clean conveyance from the trustees of the will, without reference to the condition or gift over.—*Re DA COSTA, CLARKE v. The rule respecting executory devises is extremely well settled; & a limitation by way of executory devise is good if it may take place after a life or lives in being, & within twenty-one years & the fraction of another year afterwards (LORD KENYON, C.J.).

(2) If personal property be so limited that, if it were an estate of inheritance, it would give an estate tail, the absolute interest vests in the first taker. But if the limitation be with a double aspect to A., & to the issue of his body, if there be any such issue living at his death, if not, then over, it is a good limitation (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—*WILKINSON v. Nothing can be clearer in point of law, than that if an estate be given to A. in fee, & by way of executory devise, an estate be given over which may take place within a life or lives in being & twenty-one years & a fraction of a year afterwards, the latter is good by way of executory devise (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—*ROE d. The meaning of the word heirs in the codicil not to be confined to children, from comparison with the will, & the bequest over therefore too remote.

The present question applies only to personal property. . . . Now, if there had been no codicil, as this devise over is within the proper limits, it is perfectly legal (PLUMER, M.R.).—GRIFFITHS v. GRIEVE (1819), 1 Jac. & W. 31; 37 E. R. 287.

The effect of the gift of the sum of £500 stock to S. to receive the interest during her life & then to her issue, was to give her an absolute interest in that sum; & that such absolute interest was not affected by the subsequent words of the will, the limitation over in case of her death without issue, unrestricted by any words limiting the generality of the expression "without issue" being void for remoteness (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—*A.-G. v. I had no great doubt before, & think it too remote a limitation of a personalty, there being nothing to restrain it to heirs living at the death; for then it might take effect. . . .

The only objection is, that here is no gift, but only a direction to pay the interest to him for life; but that makes no difference; it being plainly given to the heirs of his body, & the profits being to him for life, it must necessarily vest the whole interest & property to him (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

172. General rule.]—Testator devises his real estates to trustees, to several persons for life, with remainder to their first & other sons in tail male successively; but directs his trustees, upon the birth of every son of each tenant for life, to revoke the uses before limited to their respective sons in tail male, & to limit the premises to such sons for their lives, with immediate remainders to the respective sons of such sons in tail male:—Held: this clause of revocation & resettlement was void, as tending to a perpetuity, & being repugnant to the estate settled.

The common law seemed wisely to consider that the real property of this state ought, to a degree, to be put in commerce, to be left free to answer the exigencies of the possessors & their families, & therefore permitted no perpetuities by way of entails: a though it allowed contingent remainders, it afforded them no protection. . . .

If the law would permit the confinement of an estate beyond a life in being, & the time for a remainderman's minority to expire; as the law is a system, it would have certainly allowed it to be done by way of limitation, where, the estate being limited, the extent of the owner's dominion is visible to all who transact with him; . . . but to say the law does not allow this by direct limitation, & yet allows the same thing to be effected, by I know not what magic, in the modification of an equitable estate, would be productive of infinite suits & questions, tending to defeat the design of both law & equity (LORD NORTHINGTON, LORD KEEPER).

Though by the rules of law an estate may be limited by way of contingent remainder to a person not in esse for life, or as an inheritance; yet a remainder to the issue of such contingent remainderman as a purchaser, is a limitation unheard of in law, nor ever attempted, as far as I have been able to discover (LORD NORTHINGTON, LORD KEEPER).—*MARLBOROUGH (DUKE) v. At testator's decease M. was living & had no son who had attained twenty-five, but his eldest son attained that age during the lives of the widow & H. This son died in the lifetime of H. without having taken the name & arms of testator:—Held: (1) the limitation to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years could not be treated as intended to give an immediately vested interest liable to be divested on death under twenty-five, but was a limitation contingent on the son's attaining the age of twenty-five years; (2) when the legal estate in fee is vested in trustees under the instrument which creates the beneficial limitations, the feudal rule by which a contingent remainder fails, if it does not vest before the determination of the particular estate, does not apply, & the limitation to such son of M. as should attain twenty-five years, assuming it to have been an equitable remainder, would still have been void for remoteness.—Re FINCH, ABBISS v. 181. General rule.]—(1) The limitation of the trust of a term, & the limitation of the estate of a term, all depends upon one & the same reason.

Everywhere, where there is not any inconvenience, any danger of a perpetuity, & whenever you stop at the limitation of a fee upon a fee, there we will stop in the limitation of a term of years (LORD NOTTINGHAM, C.).

(2) But on the other side, future interests, springing trusts, or trusts executory, remainders that are to emerge & arise upon contingencies, are quite out of the rules & reasons of perpetuities, nay, out of the reason upon which the policy of the law is founded in those cases, especially, if they be not of remote or long consideration; but such as by a natural & easy interpretation will speedily wear out, & so things come to their right channel again. . . . But it has been often agreed that where it is within the compass of one life, that the contingency is to happen, there is no danger of a perpetuity (LORD NOTTINGHAM, C.).

(3) If a term be devised, or the trust of a term limited to one for life with twenty remainders for life successively, & all the persons in esse & alive at the time of the limitation of their estates, these, though they look like a possibility upon a possibility are all good, because they produce no inconvenience, they wear out in a little time with an easy interpretation (LORD NOTTINGHAM, C.).—NORFOLK'S (DUKE) CASE, HOWARD v. 191. Discretionary trust—For maintenance.]—

Testator bequeathed to trustees the residue of his personal estate, upon trust for investment & to apply the whole income, or such part thereof as his trustees or trustee for the time being in their absolute discretion should think fit, in or towards the maintenance, education, apprenticeship, or in any other manner for the benefit of the child or children of testator's sister, until they should respectively attain the age of twenty-three, & to accumulate & invest as capital any unapplied portion of the income; & upon further trust, as to both capital & income of the investments, to stand possessed thereof upon trust for the child, if only one, or all the children, if more than one, of the sister who, either before or after her decease, should attain twenty-three, such children, if more than one, to take in equal shares as tenants in common, & the issue of such of the children of the sister as might be then dead, such issue taking only as tenants in common the share which their respective parents would have taken if living. Testator died in Feb. 1888. His sister, who was a widow, had only two children, a daughter who attained twenty-three on Mar. 10, 1892, & a son who was born on May 28, 1874. On Jan. 30, 1889, upon a summons issued by the trustees of the will, the sister's two children being defts., the ct. was of opinion that the bequest of the residuary personalty to her children was void for remoteness, but that the persons to take the residuary personalty could not be determined till her death; & it was ordered that the trustees should accumulate the surplus income until further order. The trustees had never applied any part of the income under the discretionary trust for maintenance, etc., but had accumulated the whole in accordance with the order. Upon a summons in 1895 by the sister's two children:—Held: the trust for maintenance was distinct from the trust of the capital of the residuary personalty, & was valid; the trustees could now exercise the discretion given to them by the will; in their absolute discretion they might now apply all or any part of the income which accrued down to Mar. 10, 1892, & of the accumulations thereof, in or towards the maintenance, etc., of two plffs., & similarly might apply all or any part of the income from Mar. 10, 1892, & of the accumulations thereof, & of the future income & accumulations until younger pltf. should attain twenty-three, for his maintenance, etc.—*Re WISE, JACKSON v. The will, after other devises & bequests bequeathed the residue of the estate to the trustees to be used by them in maintaining the house & premises. It gave them power to make sales of any real estate, the proceeds to be devoted "to maintain my said residence in the manner in which it has been heretofore maintained"; & it further provided that if it should be necessary to sell the house, the residuary estate then remaining was to be equally divided among the several pecuniary legatees under the will:—Held: the trust constituted by the will offended against the perpetuity rule & was void.—*KENNEDY v. 194. Imperative trust—To maintain house & contents—While in possession of devisees—With interests vesting within period.]—By his will testator bequeathed Brook House & contents & the stables held therewith, the leases of which would expire in 1995, to trustees upon trust to permit his granddaughter E. to have the use & enjoyment thereof during her life, & after her death upon trust for such one or more of her children or issue as she should by will or deed appoint, & in default of such appointment for the first of her sons or, failing any son, the first of her daughters attaining twenty-one. Subject to these trusts the trustees were to hold Brook House & contents upon similar successive trusts in favour of his granddaughter R. & her family, his nephew & his family, & his niece & her family. Testator then directed that: the rent, outgoings, rates & taxes for the time being payable in respect of the messuages & premises & keeping the same & the contents thereof insured against fire & burglary & in a proper state of preservation shall be always paid by my trustees out of the income of my residuary personal estate:—Held: (1) the clause charged the income of the residuary personal estate, during (a) the term of the leases, & (b) such time as the leases remained the property of a beneficiary deriving his or her title directly under the will, with the payment of an annual sum for the personal benefit of such beneficiary, the sum varying in amount according to ascertainable facts; (2) the direction did not violate the rule against perpetuities, because the right to the annual sum must vest within the legal period; (3) The duration of the right beyond that period was no infringement of the rule, which was concerned with the creation & vesting of interests & not with their duration. The uncertainty of the quantum of the annual sum did not render the disposition void, because the interest arose & was vested within the legal period, & although the amount necessary to satisfy it was expressed in uncertain terms, it was capable of being rendered certain; & because the whole property—namely, the interest in question & the property subject to that interest, was vested in some person or persons during the legal period.—*Re CASSEL, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. #### SUB-SECT. 4.—CONTRACTS.

A. In General.

195. General rule.]—(1) By a deed dated in Aug. 1865, which recited that the plff. co. were seized in fee simple of certain land which was no longer required for the purposes of their railway, the co. conveyed the land to G. in fee for £100, & G. covenanted with the co. that he, his heirs or assigns, would at any time thereafter whenever the land might be required for the railway or works of the co., & whenever thereunto requested by the co. on a six calendar months' notice, & upon receiving £100, reconvey the land to the co. In 1879 deft. purchased the land from G.'s heir, with notice of the above covenant. In 1880 the co. gave deft. notice to reconvey the land, & upon his refusal to do so this action was brought for specific performance of the covenant. The co. had power in 1865 by their special Act to purchase land by agreement, though not compulsorily, & that power was extended to the present time by subsequent Acts:—Held: as the covenant gave to the co. an executory interest in land to arise on an event which might occur after the period allowed by the rules as to remoteness, it was invalid on the ground of remoteness.

(2) It appears to me therefore plain that the option is unlimited in point of time. If then the rule as to remoteness applies to a covenant of this nature, this covenant clearly is bad as extending beyond the period allowed by the rule. Whether the rule applies or not depends upon this as it appears to me, does or does not the covenant give an interest in the land? If it is a bare or mere personal contract it is of course not obnoxious to the rule. . . . But if it binds the land it creates an equitable interest in the land. The right to call for a conveyance of the land is an equitable interest on equitable estate. In the ordinary case of a contract for purchase there is no doubt about this, & an option for repurchase is not different in its nature (JESSEL, M.R.).

(3) It appears to me therefore that this covenant plainly gives the co. an interest in the land, & as regards remoteness there is no distinction that I know of, unless the case falls within one of the recognised exceptions such as charities, between one kind of equitable interest & another kind of equitable interest. In all cases they must take effect as against the owners of the land within a prescribed period. It was suggested that the rule has no application to any case of contract, but in my opinion the mode in which the interest is created is immaterial. Whether it is by devise or voluntary gift or contract can make no difference (JESSEL, M.R.).—LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. CO. v. GOMM (1882), 20 Ch. D. 562; 51 L. J. Ch. 530; 46 L. T. 449; 30 W. The co. also agreed to make a certain defined level crossing.

On Dec. 31, 1847, the landowner conveyed the strip to the railway co., reserving to himself, his heirs, appointees, & assigns, the defined level crossing & the right to make a tunnel at his or their own expense, the level crossing & the privilege of making a tunnel being accepted in lieu of all other accommodation works. The site of the tunnel was in no way defined:—Held: as against the original covenants, the railway co., the provision in the agreement as to the tunnel was a personal contract & was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.

The fact that there is some connection with a reference to land does not make a personal contract by A. less a personal contract binding on him, with all the remedies arising thereout, unless the ct. can by construction turn it from a personal contract into a limitation of land, & a limitation of land only. As regards the original covenantor it may be both; he may have attempted both to limit the estate, which may be bad for perpetuity, & he may have entered into a personal covenant which is binding on him because the rule against perpetuities has no application to such a covenant (FAREWELL, L.J.).—SOUTH EASTERN RY. ## D. Options to Purchase and Rights of Pre-emption or Repurchase.

206. Right of pre-emption—Unlimited in extent.]—A right of pre-emption held limited to the life of the owner of the property. Semble: a right of pre-emption, "at all times thereafter," cannot be enforced after the death of the owner of the property.

The other agreement is this. It is at all times thereafter to give pltf. his trustees & assigns, the right of pre-emption. . . . If I could treat it as a distinct & separate contract, I should require much more argument to convince me that a contract which gives a right of pre-emption, "at all times hereafter," is one which could be enforced after the death of the owner of the property (ROMILLY, M.R.). —STOCKER v. 209. — Covenant by purchaser to reconvey.]—By his will testator devised his property to trustees upon trust for his eldest son for life, with remainder in trust for his first & other sons in tail male, with remainder in trust for testator's second & third sons successively for life with the like limitations to their first & other sons, respectively, with remainder in trust for his grandson for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male, with remainders over. In accordance with a power to that effect in the will, the trustees sold a portion of the settled land to a tenant for life, & by a separate deed he covenanted with the trustees that he would not, "during the continuance of the strict settlement," sell or dispose of the land otherwise than as therein mentioned; & that he would, in case he should at any time thereafter "during the continuance of the aforesaid settlement" be called upon by the trustees so to do, & upon being re-imbursed the purchase money & costs, reconvey all such of the lands so sold to him as might then remain unsold or undisposed of:—Held: the covenant was void as tending to a perpetuity. —TREVELYAN v. TREVELYAN (1885), 53 L. T. 853.

210. Option to purchase—First refusal.]—(1) A racecourse co. agreed with a canal co., that if it should be at any time proposed to use their racecourse for dock purposes the racecourse co. should give the canal co. the first refusal thereof:—Held: a proposed user by any intending purchaser, including the canal co., entitled the canal co. to a first refusal.

In an agreement inter partes between these two cos. clause 3 [right of first refusal] would clearly be void for perpetuity because there is no limitation in point of time (FARWELL, J.).

(2) When the legislature declares an agreement valid, it is valid in toto, & I am not at liberty to hold it partly invalid. In 1904 an action was brought by an assignee of the lease, who had given notice of his desire to exercise the option, against assigns of the lessor to compel a conveyance of the land accordingly:—Held: the option to purchase was invalid on the ground of remoteness. —WOODALL v. CLIFTON, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L. J. Ch. 555; 92 L. T. 292; 53 W. R. 203; 21 T. L. R. 78; affd., [1905] 2 Ch. 266, C. A.

pltf. of their desire to purchase the land, convey it to them for £1,325. The lessor died in 1902. In 1905 pltf. served on her devisees notice of their desire to purchase. The devisees maintained that the option was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities; & the corpn. brought this action against them & the lessor's exor. for specific performance of the contract to sell, or in the alternative, damages for breach of contract:—Held: the option to purchase was void for remoteness, & could not be enforced by specific performance; this defect was not cured by the fact that the option was given for charitable purposes, inasmuch as the interest of the charity did not become effective till the happening of the future event; but pltf. were entitled to recover damages from defts. for breach of the covenant to convey.

The act, therefore, which the covenant binds the covenantor to perform is not an illegal act. What alone is illegal is the limitation of land which is to take effect at a period too remote (WARINGTON, J.).—WORTHING CORPN. v. HEATHER [1906] 2 Ch. 532; 75 L. J. Ch. 761; 95 L. T. 718; 22 T. #### SUB-SECT. 5.—COVENANTS.

A. Covenants Running with the Land.

See, generally, LANDLORD & TENANT, Vol. XXXI., pp. 141–148; REAL PROPERTY; SALE OF LAND.

213. General rule.—D., who was sub-lessee of certain premises, demised the same to F. for the residue of the term then vested in him less the last days thereof, & covenanted for himself, his exors., administrators & assigns, that in case he should obtain from the freeholder, his heirs or assigns, any extension of the term for which he then held the premises, then he, his exors., administrators or assigns, would grant to F. a new lease for such extended term as would include the unexpired residue of the original term granted to F., & the further term less the last days thereof, which might be granted to D. by the freeholder, his heirs or assigns. D. died, & his reversion became vested in deft., who surrendered his term to the freeholder & obtained from him a new lease for an extended term, subject to existing underleases. F. having died, pltf. acquired from his exors. his interest in the premises, & then claimed specific performance of D.'s covenant with F.:—Held: the covenant was not strictly a covenant for renewal, & did not on that account run with the land; but assuming that it did run with the land, the doctrine of perpetuity had no application.

Perpetuity has no application to covenants which run with the land, because they are so annexed to the land as to create something in the nature of an interest in the land (FARWELL, J.).—MULLER v. TRAFORD, [1901] 1 Ch. 54; 70 L. J. Ch. 72; 49 W. R. 132.

214. Application of rule—Restrictive covenant—Building scheme.—J. having divided freehold land into lots, by three deeds agreed to sell certain lots to A., B. & C. for building purposes, reserving a portion thereof for himself. In all the deeds of agreements were covenants between J. & A., B. &

C., respectively, that the latter should, within a certain period, erect dwelling-houses upon their respective lots, in a uniform row, & with a specified frontage, etc.; & then J. covenanted for himself, his heirs & assigns, that in case he or they should build on the ground he had reserved, the same uniformity was to be maintained in the building. J. afterwards conveyed the land he had reserved to T., & the deed of conveyance recited the before-mentioned deeds of agreement, & contained a covenant by J. that he would, in the conveyance to A., B. & C. require them to enter into covenants with T., similar to those contained in the deeds of agreement. T. also covenanted with J. that in case he should build upon the ground purchased by him, he would build the front in a line. Afterwards J. executed a conveyance to A. of the land comprised in the lot he had purchased, & entered into the covenants contained in his deed of agreement; & this lot was afterwards conveyed to pltf. The lot purchased by T. afterwards became vested in defts., who, in June, 1853, commenced building a chapel, which projected eighteen feet beyond the proper frontage, whereupon pltf., by his solr., told defts. that the building was, he believed, contrary to certain covenants contained in his deed which he requested, but defts. refused to allow him, to see. On Sept. 2, 1853, pltf. obtained drafts of some of the building agreements, & on Sept. 21 gave notice to defts. not to proceed with the building; & in Oct., on their non-compliance with the notice, filed a bill, & obtained an injunction upon an interlocutory motion:—Held: the covenant was binding upon the land, notwithstanding the objections taken to it as tending to a perpetuity.—*COLES v. 218. Construction of covenant—No presumption against perpetuities.]—A lessor demised hereditaments to the lessee, his heirs & assigns for the natural lives of the lessee & two other persons & the longest liver of them, with a covenant that the lessor, his heirs & assigns, upon the lessee, his heirs or assigns "surrendering this present demise as hereinafter mentioned," should at any time thereafter at the request of the lessee his heirs or assigns, "as often as one or two life or lives of & in the hereditaments" should drop & be determined, renew & grant a further term "for any other life or two lives of any other person or persons to be nominated by the lessee his heirs or assigns in the stead of the persons life or lives so dropping or determining"; the lessee his heirs or assigns paying to the lessor his heirs or assigns "for every such renewal for every life or lives of such person or persons so to be renewed as aforesaid the sum of 40s. only, & at the same time surrendering this present demise to be cancelled":—Held: upon the true construction of the covenant the right of renewal was neither perpetual, nor limited to one renewal for not more than two new lives, but was a right of renewal as often as any of the three original lives should drop, so that any such renewal might take place either on the dropping of any one of the three lives, or after the dropping of any two of them, as the lessee might from time to time request.

I am not inclined to adopt the language which is to be found in some authorities to the effect that there is a sort of legal presumption against a right of perpetual renewal in cases of this kind (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—SWINBURNE v. ### B. Limitations on Determination of Estate Tail.

225. General rule.]—Lands, held in fee simple, were by settlement made in 1752, conveyed to trustees, to the use of the settlor for life; remainder to the use of his three daughters for their lives, as tenants in common; remainder to the use of trustees to preserve; remainder, as to the share of each daughter, to the use of her first & other sons successively in tail male; remainder, in case of the death of any one or more of the daughters without issue male, to the use of the survivors or survivor, during their or her respective lives or life, as tenants in common in case of two survivors, with remainder, in like manner as to the original share, to the use of the first & other sons of such surviving daughters or daughter in tail male; remainder, in case all the daughters should die without issue male, as to the share of each, to the use of their daughters as tenants in common in tail; & in case one or two of the settlor's daughters should die without issue, the share or shares of such daughter or daughters to go to the use of the daughters of the survivors or survivor, as tenants in common in tail general, & in case all three should die without issue, then remainder over, with ultimate remainder to the use of the settlor in fee. He died soon after without disposing of the reversion:—Held: the limitation, in case of the failure of issue, generally, of any of the daughters, to the daughters of the survivors or survivor, was a good contingent remainder, & therefore not void for remoteness.

It is said that this last limitation is too remote, because, there being no previous limitation to issue generally, there might be a failure of all the prior limitations, & yet issue, as in the case of a son or of a daughter, might exist, so that this last limitation would not take effect. But if this be a remainder, it would be barrable, & the objection, therefore, would not arise (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—COLE v. SEWELL (1848), 2 H. L. Cas. 186; 12 Jur. 927; 9 E. R. 1062, H. L.

No limitation after estates tail is . . . too remote; & it appears to us clear that whether the limitation be directly to a class of issue to be ascertained at the determination of the estate tail, or a gift to a trustee for such class, or upon trust to convey to such class, or to sell & to divide the proceeds among such class, is wholly immaterial, if the legal & beneficial interests should be both ascertainable at the moment of the determination of the estate tail (JAMES, L.J.).

(2) If a clause in a will offends against the rule against perpetuities, yet, in construing the will, such clause cannot be disregarded, but must be read as the expression of testator's intention as though no such rule existed.—*HEASMAN v. That is a perfectly good direction. Being subsequent to the estate tail, & taking effect during its continuance, it is not too remote. The estate tail would not merge in the fee. It would be protected by statute de Donis, 1285 (c. 1). The heirs of the body would still claim per formam doni, though the ancestor by levying a fine might bar his issue, & acquire a base fee which would merge (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—*VAN GRUTTEN v. his son H. for life, remainder for his (testator's) grandson S. for life, remainder for "his first & other sons in tail male for the respective terms of their respective lives successively & in remainder one after the other so that such son only as shall be entitled to & bear the title of Viscount Mountgarret shall be entitled to such rents & profits & in default of such issue upon trust as hereinafter set out for the holder for the time being of the Mountgarret title & in the event of such title becoming extinct," then upon trust for testator's right heirs living at the death of the last holder of said title. The will contained a residuary devise. The Mountgarret title was created by King Edward VI., who conferred it upon R., & the heirs male of his body. Testator died in 1900 & H. became the 14th Viscount. He was twice married. By his first marriage in 1868 he had one son only, namely, S.; & by his second marriage in 1902 he had one child only, pltf. H. died in 1912, & S. became the 15th Viscount & died without issue in 1918. On the death of S. pltf. became the 16th Viscount, & questions arose as to what interest he took under the will of the 13th Viscount in the Irish estates:—Held: the true effect of the devise was to create estates in tail male & not merely life estate in the first & other sons successively of the 15th Viscount, & consequently the gift over in default of his male issue was not void for remoteness.—Re MOUNTGARRET, MOUNTGARRET v. INGILBY, [1919] 2 Ch. 294; 88 L. J. Ch. 405; 121 L. T. 414; 35 T. L. R. 585; 63 Sol. Jo. 620.

One seised in fee may create a term for years, to commence after his death without issue; but one possessed of a term for two thousand years, cannot out of that term carve a future term to commence after the determination of an estate in tail.—KIRSLEY v. DUCK (1712), 2 Vern. 684; 23 E. R. 1044.

231. —.]—To raise legacies.]—Testatrix devises to A. for life, remainder to A.'s first & other sons in tail male, remainder to A.'s daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail; remainder to trustees for a term of years upon trust, to raise & pay such legacies as she had thereafter given, or should give by any codicil: &, in a subsequent part of the will, she bequeaths various legacies from & immediately after the decease, & failure of issue of A.:—Held: "failure of issue" in the gift of the legacies must be considered "failure of such issue, as were included in the limitation of the estate," &, therefore, the bequests were not too remote.—*MORSE v. 232. —.]—Charge.]—Testator, by his will, charged his debts & legacies upon his real & personal estate, & gave such real & personal estate to trustees upon trust for his nephew for life, to whom also he gave a legacy, with remainder to the first & other sons of the nephew successively in tail male, with remainder to the second & every other son of testator's brother successively in tail male, remainder to testator's own right heirs; & added: " & upon this last-mentioned contingency, failing heirs male of my said brother, & of my said estate going to my right heirs more remote as aforesaid, then I do hereby charge, subject & make liable my said estate with the payment of the sum of £5,000 to my niece." Testator died in 1775, leaving his brother his heir-at-law. The nephew entered into possession to the real estate which consisted of a plantation in Jamaica, subject to a mtge. created by testator in 1765. The brother afterwards died, leaving the nephew, his only son, & then heir-at-law of testator; the nephew died in 1822 without issue male. The bill was filed in 1837 against the mtgees. & the devisees of the nephew to obtain payment of the niece's legacy of £5,000:—Held: on the death of the nephew without issue male, the event happened on which the niece would become entitled to the legacy of £5,000; & it was not too remote.

233. — Gift over in strict settlement.—Testator gave his freehold & copyhold estates & his personal estate to certain persons, whom he appointed his exors., in trust, out of his personal estate & by sale or mtge. of his freehold & copyhold estates, to raise money sufficient to pay his debts, funeral expenses & legacies, & out of the rents & interest of so much of his real & personal estate as should not be sold or disposed of for those purposes, to pay certain annuities & such sums as his trustees should think sufficient for the maintenance of his son J. & his children, if he should have any, & to accumulate the residue of the rents & interest during the life of J., & after J.'s decease, to stand seised of his real estates, in trust for J.'s first son & the heirs of the body of such first son, successively as they should be in priority of birth, & for the several & respective heirs of the body & bodies of every such son, & for default of such issue, for A. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail, with remainder to B. & his sons, & to C. & D. & their sons in like manner, with remainder to his own right heirs for ever; & he declared that his trustees & exors. should stand possessed of his personal estate after J.'s death, in trust for such person or persons, in the same order & succession, & for such & the same estates & interests as were thereby declared concerning his real estates, so far as the nature of the property, the rules of law & equity, the deaths of parties & other contingencies would admit. Testator died in 1780; his son J. was his heir-at-law & customary heir. J. & A., B., C. & D., died without issue:—Held: the trusts subsequent to the trust for the first son of J. were not void for remoteness, & the ultimate trust of the personal estate, as well as of the freehold & copyhold estates, vested, on testator's death, in his son J., as his heir-at-law at his death.—*BOYDELL v. 235. — Persons & shares ascertained.—Testator devised his real estate unto & to the use of his trustees & their heirs upon trust to pay the net rents & profits to his brother during his life, & after his death to stand seised of his real estate upon trust for the first & other sons of his brother successively in tail with remainder upon trust for the first & other daughters of his brother successively in tail, & if the trusts for his brother for life, & for his issue in tail should fail or determine, then testator directed his trustees on such failure or determination to sell his real estate & hold the net proceeds of sale thereof upon trust for such of testator's five cousins, naming them, as should be living when said direction for sale should come into operation, each share to be retained upon the usual trusts of a settled share for such cousin for life, & after his or her death for his or her children, provided always that if any of his said five cousins should die before the aforesaid direction for sale should come into operation leaving a child or children living when such direction should come into operation who being male should attain twenty-one, or being female should attain twenty-one or marry, then & in every such case the last-mentioned child or children should take, & if more than one equally between them, the share to which his, her, or their parent would have been entitled for life, if such parent had not died before the direction for sale had come into operation.

Testator died in 1902. His brother died without issue in 1911. Three out of the five cousins had died before the brother's death, one of them leaving a child still an infant. On a summons to determine whether the above trusts were void for remoteness:—Held: inasmuch as all the persons to take & the shares in which they were to take must necessarily be ascertained, if not at or before the determination of the estates tail, at any rate within a life in being at testator's death & twenty-one years after, the trusts of the proceeds of sale subsequent to the determination of the estates tail did not offend against the rule against perpetuities, & were valid.—*Re HAYGARTH, WICKHAM v. #### C. Shifting Clause in Defeasance of Estate Tail.

237. General rule.—(1) Testator by codicil, after appointing two persons trustees, as also their heirs & assigns, to his will & codicil, desired that his sister A. should do what she pleased with his remaining property after payment of certain legacies, excepting a tenement at W., & a sum of stock, of which she should only receive the interest & rent during her natural life, & afterwards to his sister's eldest son, on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name of M., or his sister A. depart this life without a son, then the tenement at W. & stock should go to P., on his taking the name of M., & so on to his heirs, each taking the name of M., none of them being allowed to touch the principal, & no one should, after his sister A., inherit the said property or enjoy the interest who did not take or possess the name of M.:—Held: the trustees took an estate in fee by virtue of their appointment, & A. was entitled to an estate for life in the tenement & stock, with a remainder in fee in the tenement, & an absolute interest in stock to the first born of A. vested on his birth & baptism by the name of M.

as to name & arms a condition subsequent, although it inclines to hold it so.

(3) It is well settled that, if there be a gift to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee, with a shifting clause by which in a certain event, the estate is to shift from B. to another; unless the event must necessarily take effect within the prescribed limits, it is void for remoteness; although it is different where such a shifting clause is attached to an estate tail, because the power of barring the estate tail is a sufficient protection against perpetuity (KINDERLEY, V.-C.).—BENNETT v. BENNETT (1864), 2 Drew & Sm. 266; 34 L. J. Ch. 34; 11 L. T. 362; 10 Jur. N. S. 1170, 13 W. R. 66, 62 E. R. 623.

239. —.]—Proviso in a will that, in case the devisee should come into possession of the family estate, the trustees should stand seised of the devised estate, to the use of the next person in remainder, valid. The eldest son of the tenant in possession is the next person in remainder.

There is no doubt with respect to the validity of the proviso: several estates are held under similar limitations. No rule of law is contradicted by it: & if no recovery was suffered, it might take place at any distance of time. I might as well be told that an estate tail is an illegal estate, because it may endure for ever, & must, where the remainder is in the Crown (KENYON, M.R.).—NICOLLS v. SHEFFIELD (1787), 2 Bro. 240. —.]—By indenture of settlement, two estates, A. & B., were limited to the father for life & subject thereto, the estate A. was limited to the first & other sons in tail male & the estate B. was limited to the second & other sons in like manner; & it was provided that if the second son should become an eldest son & as such should become entitled to the actual possession or to the receipt of the rents & profits of the estate A., the limitations of the estate B. should cease & determine as if such second son were dead without issue. The second son, by the death of his elder brother, became the eldest son & joined his father in suffering a recovery of the estate A. the uses of which were declared to the joint appointment of the father & son & subject thereto to the old uses: in exercise of this power, the father & son by a mtge. in fee of the estate A. raised a sum of money which was paid to the father & son:—Held: on the death of the father, the estate B. shifted from the second son under the terms of the proviso contained in the settlement; the recovery suffered by the father & son did not by itself prevent the operation of the proviso, & the mtge. had not that effect, but, notwithstanding both the recovery & the mtge., the second son came on the death of his father into possession of the estate A. within the meaning of the terms of the settlement; the party entitled to the estate A. might previously to the happening of the event mentioned in the proviso have so exercised his rights over the estate as to have prevented it from ever coming into the possession of the second son within the meaning of the terms of the settlement.

As regards a question that has been alluded to, namely, whether the proviso did not create a perpetuity, I am clearly of opinion that no valid objection can be raised on that ground (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).—HARRISON v. ROUND (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 190; 22 L. J. Ch. 322; 20 L. T. O. S. 118; 17 Jur. 568; 1 W. R. 26; 42 E. R. 844, L. C.

241. On succession to title.]—One devised lands to trustees in fee, subject to the uses of a certain term of one thousand years, to the use of W. for life, second son of the devisor's daughter E., subject to the proviso after mentioned, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent uses during W.'s life, but to permit him to take the rents, etc.; & after his decease to the use of his first & other sons successively in tail male, subject to the same proviso, etc., & in default of such issue, remainder to the use of the third & other sons of E. successively in tail male, subject to the same proviso, etc.; & in default of such issue, with like remainders. to the second son of E.'s eldest son, etc., & in default of such issue, to the use of the devisor's granddaughter C. for life, subject to the proviso, etc.; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent uses, etc.; remainder to the use of her first son, plff., in tail male, with other remainders over; all subject to the same proviso; which was, that if W. or either of the persons to whom the estate was limited should become Earl of E., the use limited to such person & his issue male should cease & be void, as if such person were dead without issue of his body. The devisor's daughter E. at the time of his death had only two sons, her eldest, afterwards Lord E., & said W., but she had afterwards a third who died under age; & W. was let into possession at twenty-three, & had one son:—Held: on the death of his eldest brother without issue, by which event W. became the Earl of E., plff. who was then next in remainder, supposing W. had in fact died without issue, was entitled under the will to take an estate in tail male in possession subject to the trusts of the term of one thousand years.—*CARR v. D. Term Prior to Estate Tail.

243. Trusts of term contrary to rule—Void.]—(1) The trusts of a term, limited previous to an estate tail, for raising extra portions on the death of a party without issue, was held invalid, as tending to a perpetuity: because, being limited antecedently to the estate tail, it could not be defeated by a recovery.

(2) Two estates were devised to trustees, for five hundred years, with remainder, as to one estate, to A. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons, in tail, with remainder to A.'s daughters, equally, in tail general, with remainder to B., for life, with remainder to his first & other sons, in tail, with remainder to his daughters equally, in tail general. The other estate was, mutatis mutandis, similarly settled on B. & his issue, with remainder to A. & his issue. The trusts of the term were declared to be, to raise £2,000 each, for C. & D., " & if A. or B. should depart this life without issue, whereby the survivor of them would become entitled to " the two estates, to raise a further sum of £2,000 apiece, for C. & D. B. died leaving issue, & afterwards C. died without issue, whereby the two estates centred in the issue of B. :—Held : the trust for raising the further sums of £2,000 did not take effect.—CASE v. DROSER (1837), 2 Keen, 764; 6 L. J. Ch. 353; 1 Jur. 352; 48 E. R. 824; affd. (1839), 5 My. & Cr. 246, L. C.

244. ———.]—Testator directed a settlement of certain estates to be made, so far as the rules of law & equity would allow, to certain uses, as to part, it was to be settled to the use of trustees for 2,000 years in his W. estate, in trust to pay any child of his body, or the issue of such child, who, under the limitations of the will, should be entitled to the possession of the rents of his W. estate, & who, having attained twenty-one, should be under the age of twenty-five, an annual sum of £800 till he should have attained twenty-one or die under that age; & to accumulate the surplus, as well during the minority, or respective minorities of every person so for the time being entitled, as during such time as any child of his body so being entitled as aforesaid should be under the age of twenty-five, & at the end of every period of accumulation to apply the accumulated fund towards payment of his debts :—Held : this trust for accumulation was void.—*SCARISBRICK v. 245. ———.]—Testator in 1802 devised estates to his eldest son R. for life, with remainders to his grandson R. for life; to trustees to preserve contingent estates; to other trustees for 500 years upon certain trusts; to the first & other sons of his grandson R. in tail male; & in default of issue, to the second & other sons of his son R. in tail male; & in default of issue to his son N. for life; to the same trustees to preserve contingent estates: to the first & other sons of N. in tail male; with remainders over in favour of other sons for life & their issue in tail. The limitation of the term was for the purpose of enabling the trustees, by mtge. or otherwise, in case any one or more of testator's younger sons, or their issue, should become seised in possession by virtue of the limitations of the estates devised to his son R. for life, with remainders over, to raise a sum of £5,000 for the benefit of such of testator's sons, except the son in possession of the estates, as should be then living, or their issue. Testator's eldest son had no son other than testator's grandson, R., who died on Feb. 24, 1870, without issue, & the estates devolved upon the infant deff., a grandson of testator's son, N. Pltfs. were a younger son of N., & the son of testator's younger son H. :—Held : according to the true construction of the will, & the events which had happened, the sum of £5,000 was validly charged upon the estates, & was now raisable with interest at 4 per cent. from Feb. 24, 1870, & the charge failed for remoteness.—*SYKES v. 250. ———.]—A father, on the marriage of his daughter in 1806, settled real estate upon trusts for the separate use of his daughter for life, with remainder in case she survived her husband, which event happened, to her children, as tenants in common in tail, & limited the reversion to himself in fee. The settlement contained a collateral power of sale not in terms restricted as to time. In 1850, the daughter's issue being spent, & the daughter being a widow & more than seventy years of age, the trustees executed a deed purporting to be made in exercise of the power, & to be a conveyance of the fee simple :—Held : the power was valid & subsisting at the date of the deed of 1850, it was well exercised by that deed, although, under the trusts of the settlement, the effect of its exercise was to change the devolution of the property, passing it, in the events which had happened, to the daughter absolutely.

The ct. looks to the whole intent & purpose of the settlement, & whether the reversion or remainder in fee simple be limited after estates tail or after estate for life, will hold the power to be a valid & subsisting power until the estates tail, if any, are barred, or the fee simple vested in possession : in either of which events the purpose of the settlement is spent, & the power ceases.

A collateral power of sale contained in a settlement by which estates tail are created, is manifestly good in its creation, inasmuch as it is in the power of any of the tenants in tail to destroy by means of a recovery the power so created (PAGEWOOD, V.-C.).—*LANTSBERY v. The power given to the trustees was, that it should be lawful for them at any time or times thereafter, so long as there should be any mtge. upon the estates, but, after the death of the father, not without the consent of the son, if living, in writing, to fell timber upon the estates, & to apply the proceeds in discharge of the incumbrances:—Held: (1) the power in the trustees to cut timber, so long as any mtge. debt remained, was paramount to any right in the son to cut timber; (2) the power was not to any extent invalid as tending to perpetuity.—BRIGGS v. #### SUB-SECT. 7.—INTERESTS SUBJECT TO RELEASE.

255. Alienee with power to release—Whether subject to rule.]—(1) A covenant by the lessees of certain iron works that they, their exors. or assigns, should convey limestone & iron stone by a particular railroad, is not repugnant to the law concerning perpetuities, nor to that avoiding stipulations in restraint of trade, although the leaning of the law is against such a covenant.

I do not at all doubt that the enjoyment of property may be tied up, & an illegal perpetuity created, by annexing conditions to grants, or by executing covenants whereby, whoever happens to be in possession shall be restrained from using that which is the subject of the grant or covenant, in all but a certain prescribed way; provided always that the restraint so constituted is not reserved in favour of some other party, who may release it at his pleasure; & therefore all such conditions & covenants are void if they go beyond the period allowed by law (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).

(2) Each of the tenants for life in this case had as much right to alien his contingent right to the absolute interest as to alien his life estate; & the person claiming under an assignment of the whole estate & interest of the tenant for life would, as soon as his assignor became the survivor of the other tenants for life, be entitled to the possession & enjoyment as absolute owner. It seems obvious that such a case is not within the principle in which the law against perpetuity rests, & that the limitation in question of the absolute interest does not fail as being too remote (STUART, V.-C.).—AVERN v. 258. ———.]—Concurrence of person subject to contingent right.]—In a conveyance of a plot of land, reserving the mines under it to the vendor, there was a covenant by the vendor with the purchaser that, in case the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should at any time thereafter sell, or agree to sell, to any person the mines under some adjoining lands belonging to him, he, his heirs or assigns, would at the same time offer to the purchaser of the plot of land, his heirs or assigns, the mines under that plot, & give him & them the refusal of the same for one month from the time such offer should be made, at the same price per acre as the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should have agreed to sell the adjoining mines, & if the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, should accept such offer, & within such month agree to purchase the mines so offered, at the price at which they should be offered, the vendor, his heirs or assigns, should convey the same to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns:—Held: this covenant was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.

The rule is aimed at preventing the suspension of the power of dealing with property—the alienation of land or other property. But when there is a present right of that sort, although its exercise may be dependent upon a future contingency, & the right is vested in an ascertained person or persons, that person or persons, concurring with the person who is subject to the right, can make a perfectly good title to the property (FRY, J.).—*BIRMINGHAM CANAL CO. v. Devise subject to payment of debts.—No direction to accumulate.—Not void for remoteness.]—By his will, A. devised certain freehold & personal property to trustees, whom he also named exors., for payment of debts & legacies; &, in the event of the property so devised being insufficient for that purpose, he devised all other his messuages, etc., to the same trustees, in trust to sell the same to satisfy the debts & legacies, & to divide the residue, if any, amongst all his children. "Provided, that, in case my personal estate & my lands, etc., herein first above devised, shall be sufficient to pay all my debts as aforesaid, then & in such case I give & devise to my son B., my dwelling-house, lands, etc., in F., for & during the term of his natural life," remainder to his issue, &, in default of issue, to testator's heir or heirs-at-law:—Held: the will gave B. an estate tail in the lands in F.; & the devise was not void for remoteness, by reason of its being postponed till after payment of debts; but, inasmuch as the estate was given to B., not absolutely, but only in the event of the estate first devised to the trustees proving sufficient for the payment of debts, the allegation in the count, which imported an absolute devise to B., was not proved.—RIMINGTON v. CANNON (1853), 12 C. B. 18; 22 L. J. C. P. 153; 1 W. R. 291; 138 E. R. 806, Ex. Ch.

issue, I give the premises to the trustees to permit my son L.," & then follow the same provisions with respect to L. as those which had been previously made with respect to B., & in default, etc., the premises were again given to trustees to preserve remainders, & then came a repetition of the former provisions in favour of "the son of my daughter A." B. & L. successively entered into possession of the leaseholds, & died without male issue; A. had a son, who attained twenty-one:—Held: (1) the devise over after B. was not void for remoteness, but A.'s son took an estate tail, the rule as to freeholds being in this case properly applicable to leasehold estates; (2) the direction to accumulate in respect of the term of thirty years was not void, for the legacies payable by the will were only legacies given to persons then in being.—*WILLIAMS v. 272. Accumulation to replace value—Void.]—Testator, who died in 1844, devised to trustees a moiety of his real estates upon trusts for his son for life, with remainder to his grandson for life & his sons in tail & to pay all his debts & sums of money as he should owe at the time of his decease, whether by way of mtge., bond, or otherwise, including a sum of £8,000 charged upon the estates; & he directs that the rents & profits of the estates should be received by the trustees & be applied in liquidation of the debts until the whole, including the £8,000, should be paid; that no person to whom any estate for life or in tail was limited should be entitled to the rents & profits until the estates were totally disincumbered & clear of debts; & that they should invest the moneys which come to their hands upon good security at interest until the same should be applied in payments under the trusts. A receiver had been appointed. The whole of the debts had been paid excepting the £8,000 by sales of parts of the estates under the orders of the ct., & there was an accumulation fund in ct. sufficient to pay the £8,000:—Held: the receiver must be discharged, & the tenant for life be let into possession of the estates.

I am now asked in reality to create a new trust & a new scheme; to say what might have been attempted to have been said by testator to the effect following: "provided that if any part of my estates shall be sold . . . then I direct an accumulation of rents to go on until there shall have been got together a fund equal to the value of the property sold, or the equity of redemption of which has been foreclosed; & such fund shall be dealt with as constituting part of the estate which is to be subject to the limitations of my will" . . . that certainly would, to say the least, raise a very grave question indeed whether such a provision as that was valid (HULL, V.-C.).—*TEWART v. SUB-SECT. 10.—EASEMENTS.

273. Right of way—Easement in futuro—Coming into force beyond period.]—In 1889 deft. conveyed to pltf.'s predecessors in title a strip of land for a tramway, the deed containing a reservation by the vendors of the right to cross the line at two points to be selected by them, & a covenant by the purchasers to make & provide crossings at the points selected by the vendor on notice being given. In 1892 defts. gave notice of one point selected, & from that date crossed the line there from time to time, but no crossing was ever constructed. In 1910 pltf. obstructed the crossing, & sought to restrain deft from using it:—Held: the reservation was void as breaking the rule against perpetuities, but that the covenant contained an implied personal obligation not to interfere with deft.'s crossing, which obligation became fixed & attached to the land as soon as the point was selected, & pltf. had notice thereof, & was bound thereby.

The effect of the reservation is said to be that it reserves to the vendors, their heirs & assigns, the right of passage over the tramway at two points to be selected, but there is no specified time within which the selection is to be made. Until the selection is made there is no easement; the reservation is of an easement in futuro, which may come into force at a time beyond the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities. The reservation therefore is bad (WARRINGTON, J.).—SHARPE v. DURRANT (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 423; affd., [1911] W. N. 158, C. A.

279. Application of rule.—Interests held by corporate body.]—In an action by some, on behalf of all, of the freemen of a borough to establish the right of all the individual freemen to share for their private benefit the net proceeds of certain properties vested in the corp.,—Held: the effect of the saving of rights in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 2, was to legalise the beneficial interests therein, mentioned, without reference to the legality of their origin, &, in particular, to obviate any objection which might otherwise arise in respect of the tendency towards a perpetuity of any such beneficial interest.

An action to establish such rights as aforesaid may be brought by parties claiming to be entitled, without an information by the A.-G.

In such an action it was held on demurrer that in order to enable plffs. to avail themselves of such saving of rights as aforesaid, it was sufficient for them, after stating the title of the corp., by charter or otherwise to the property in question, to aver that at the time of the passing of the Act the rents, tolls, & profits claimed by them were not, nor ever had been, nor ought to have been, held & applied to public purposes, but then were, & always had been, held & applied for the particular benefit of the freemen, & without pleading that such rents, tolls, & profits had been enjoyed or acquired by virtue of any specific statute, charter, by-law or custom, or expressly to aver that any custom to such effect as aforesaid existed.—*PRESTNEY v. Before the completion of his purchase applt. had received a letter from the clerk of the Wallasey urban district council, in answer to his inquiry, that the lane was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, & that the council had no outstanding charges for private improvement expenses against the property. In 1911 he received notice from resp. corp., successors of the local board & urban district council, to carry out the agreement of 1892 in pursuance of the local Act.

285. Accumulation for particular individual—Person entitled to stop accumulation.]—Testator directed his trustees to invest his residuary estate & suffer the interest to accumulate until the principal together with the accumulation of interest should amount to £3,000 or thereabouts, & then to place out the same at interest, & pay the interest equally among certain specified legatees named in the will in equal shares during their lives & the life of the survivor; & in case any of them should happen to die leaving lawful issue, the issue were to be entitled to the same share in the interest to which their parents would, if living, have been entitled, & immediately after the decease of the survivor of the legatees specifically named, then, upon trust, to pay the £3,000 or thereabouts equally among the lawful issue of the specified legatees to whom testator gave & bequeathed the same, but in case any of them should happen to be then dead leaving lawful issue, such issue were to be entitled to the share to which the parent or parents of such issue would, if living, have been entitled:—Held: the gift of the £3,000 or thereabouts was not void for uncertainty or remoteness, but the disposition of the income accruing between the expiration of the period allowed by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), & the end of the time required to accumulate the £3,000 was invalid, & the income for that period was undisposed of, & belonged to the next of kin.

Suppose that a fund was directed to be accumulated simply for the benefit of a particular individual until a certain amount was reached which might not be reached within the period allowed by law for the suspension of vesting, it surely could not be said that the disposition was void for remoteness, when the individual might, at any time, stop the accumulation & dispose of the fund (TURNER, L.J.).—*ODDIE v. 289. Gift to limited company—Competent to dispose of property—Bequest to secular society.]—Testator by his will gave the residue of his estate, after the death of his wife, to a co. limited by guarantee & formed to promote the principle "that all human conduct should be based upon natural knowledge, & not upon supernatural belief," together with ancillary objects, all having an anti-religious tendency:—Held: the gift was valid as being neither subversive of morality nor contrary to the law of blasphemy, nor did it create a perpetuity.

SECT. 3.—APPLICATION OF RULE IN GENERAL.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PERIOD OF VESTING.

290. General rule—No remoteness after vesting—Description of legatees immaterial.]—Gift of real & personal estate, to trustees, upon trust to apply the rents & dividends, or so much as they should think fit, to the maintenance, etc., of W. until twenty-five; then to permit him to receive the same during his life; & after his death, to apply the same or so much, etc., to the maintenance, etc., of all & every the children of W. until twenty-five respectively; then upon trust, to assign & transfer to such children so attaining twenty-five; & in case W. shall die without leaving issue living at the time of his death, or leaving such, & all die before twenty-five, upon trust, to pay, etc., unto & among all and every the brothers & sisters of W., share & share alike, upon their attainment of twenty-five, or marriage, respectively. Followed by a gift of residue, upon trust, as to one moiety, to permit testator's daughter A. & her husband to receive the rents, etc., during their lives in succession & after the death of the survivor, to the children, except W., in the same manner as with respect to the former gift. As to the other moiety, upon like trusts for testator's daughter B., her husband & family; with survivorship between the respective grandchildren; & in case of the death of either of the daughters without leaving issue living at her decease, then to the children of the surviving daughter:—Held: (1) the limitation to the brothers & sisters of W. in default of issue living to attain twenty-five, was intended to include all his brothers & sisters living at his death, & was consequently void for remoteness; (2) vested interests at twenty-five in every instance, notwithstanding different expressions, there being no antecedent gift, of which it could have been testator's intention merely to postpone the enjoyment; the gift being only the direction to pay at twenty-five.

It is the period of vesting, & not the description of the legatees, that produces the incapacity (GRANT, M.R.).

(3) A. having died, leaving issue, the moiety of the residue intended for her children held undisposed of, as being void for remoteness. The other moiety held to rest in contingency during the life of B.; & if she should die without issue, to be well given over to the children of A.

I have always understood that, with regard to personal estate, everything which is ill given by the will does fall into the residue (GRANT, M.R.).—

There were three children of the marriage, T., J. & H., & in 1890 W. by deed appointed that after her death one-third of the property should be held in trust for T., another third in trust for J. & as to the remaining third upon trust to pay the income to H., if not then a member of the Roman Catholic Church, or of any sisterhood, or until she should

297. Facts existing at death of testator.—Testator directed his trustees to carry on his business of a gravel contractor until his freehold gravel pits were worked out, & then to sell them, with power for his sons, or any of them, to bid at the sale; & he directed his trustees to hold the proceeds of sale in trust for such child or children of his "then living," & such issue living of any child or children then deceased, as should, being a son or sons, attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, attain that age or marry, in equal shares per stirpes, & he declared it to be his wish that, until such sale, his sons should continue to be employed in the business.

Testator directed his trustees to hold all the residue of his real & personal estate upon trusts for sale & investment, & to divide the income thereof equally amongst all his children during their respective lives, & upon the death of any such child, whether before or after his own death, to hold the corpus whereof the income was or would have been payable to such child, upon trust for all or any the child or children of such child, who, being a son or sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, & if more than one in equal shares:—Held: both the trust for the sale of the gravel pits & the trust declared of the proceeds of sale were void for remoteness.

The ct. can look at evidence of facts existing at the death of testator, but not at evidence of opinion or probability (DAVEY, L.J.).—Re Wood, Tullett v. Colville, [1894] 3 Ch. 381; 63 L. J. Ch. 790; 71 L. T. 413; 7 R. 495, C. A.

out power of anticipation, & on their deaths the capital to go as the daughters should by will appoint. A. was dead at the date of the will, & C. was sixty years of age, & therefore past child-bearing:—Held: if the children of A. & C. had not necessarily been lives in esse at the date of the will, the restraint on anticipation in respect of the daughters' shares would have been bad, as infringing the rule against perpetuities; but as A. was dead & C. past child-bearing, all the children were lives in esse, & the restraint on alienation was valid.

I am informed, & all the counsel agree, that she was at an age past child-bearing, namely, sixty years of age, & it is to be concluded therefore that she could never have another child (MALINS, V.-C.).—COOPER v. LAROCHE (1881), 17 Ch. D. 368; 43 L. T. 794; 29 W. R. 438.

306. ——Wherever land, or any interest in land, which would descend to the heir-at-law, is devised for purposes which the law will not permit to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of, whether testator intended that he should have it or not; for there is this distinction between the case of a devisee & that of an heir-at-law, that the devisee takes by force of the intent of testator, & can only take what is given him by the will; whereas the heir-at-law takes whatever is undisposed of, not by force of the intent, but by the rule of law. Therefore where A. devised lands to his son B. for life, remainder to the first & other sons of B. in tail male, remainder to the second, third, & other sons of A. successively in tail male; & in case there should be no such issue male of A.'s body, or the same should become extinct, then to trustees for a term of sixty years, to retain the rent, etc., & apply them in the purchase of lands to be conveyed to such person as should then be in possession by virtue of his will of certain other estates therein mentioned, for life, with such remainder as would name & blood; & after the trusts should be executed or the term expired, the estate was limited to C. for life, with remainders over; & it happened that the person so in possession at the time when the conveyance could have been made of the lands to be purchased as above was one not in existence at the time of A., testator's death, & the uses were considered as in the event too remote & void:—Held: the consequence of the failure of the intermediate devise was, not that the next devisee became entitled as if there had been no such intermediate devise, which was the opinion of the Ct. of Exchequer, but that the trusts of the lands to be purchased as above resulted to the heir-at-law.

The point at which the illegality commences is where testator limits for life to persons not in existence at the time of his death, as these could not be made tenants for life, at least not with remainders to their first & other sons, but must take a larger estate, so that I am strongly impressed with the idea that the trusts were not originally void, & that the directions to purchase were good (LORD REDESDALE).—*TREGONWELL v. 309. ———.]—Testator directed that on his daughter attaining twenty-one his trustees should pay the income of his freeholds & copyholds to her during her life; & should she live to become marriageable, & die leaving a child or children behind her born in lawful wedlock, then that his trustees should apply the income to the support & maintenance of such child, if only one, or, if more than one, equally among such children during their lives, & in like manner to their children & children's children, each family having the father or mother's share; or should his said daughter die previous to being married, or after marriage leaving no child or children behind born in lawful wedlock, or, if leaving children as afore-described, upon them or their families becoming extinct, then over. Testator's daughter survived him & attained twenty-one she being his sole heiress-at-law & a spinster. The following questions then arose; first, whether the gift over after her life estate was not void for remoteness; secondly, if not, whether she was not entitled to an immediate estate tail in possession; & thirdly, whether admitting that she took an estate for life, & that her children, if any, took life estates in remainder, she did not take an estate tail in remainder expectant on those life estates:—Held: (1) the gift over after the daughter's life estate was not void for remoteness; (2) she did not take an estate tail in possession; but that the third question could not be decided at present, as it related to future rights.

You might always give a life interest to an unborn person being a child of a person in being, & it did not matter what the gift over was after the death of such unborn child; it did not affect his interest (JESSEL, M.R.).

The doctrine is not properly cy-près at all; it is merely a rule of construction—a rule of construction that is by which you sacrifice the particular intent to the general intent. . . . The rule [of cy-près] applies just as much to direct devises as to executory trusts (JESSEL, M.R.).—HAMPTON v. HOLMAN (1877), 5 Ch. D. 183; 46 L. J. Ch. 248; 36 L. T. 287; 25 W. R. 459.

C. had several sons, of whom P. was the second. P. died without issue:—Held: the first & other sons of C. took successive life estates one after the other, & the remainder to the first & other sons of the eldest son of C. did not take effect till after the deaths of all the successive tenants for life.

All resps. . . . were born after the death of testator. As I understand the law of real property in this country, it is a rule positivi juris & not one depending on considerations of the ordinary rule against perpetuities, that you cannot limit a possibility upon a possibility. . . . I am not prepared to affirm, that a life estate to an unborn person can be limited after a life estate to an unborn person, any more than a limitation to an unborn issue (LORD DAVEY).—*HONYWOOD v. C. survived A. & B. & died leaving no issue. B. also left no issue; but A. left children who were born within due limits & who survived C.:—Held: the estate tail limited to the survivor of the children of A., whether regarded as an equitable limitation or as a legal contingent remainder, infringed the rule against perpetuities & was void for remoteness.

(2) Property may be given to an unborn person for life or to several unborn persons successively for life, with remainders over, provided that such remainders be indefeasibly vested in persons ascertained or necessarily ascertainable within the limits prescribed by the rule against perpetuities (FARWELL, J.).

(3) It is plain, moreover, that the cts. have acted upon the principle that the rule against perpetuities is to be applied where no other sufficient protection against remoteness is attainable. Thus, inasmuch as equitable contingent remainders never failed for want of a particular estate, it was held that the rule must apply to them (FARWELL, J.).—Re ASHFORTH, SIBLEY v. ASHFORTH, [1905] 1 Ch. 535; sub nom. Re ASHFORTH'S TRUSTS, ASHFORTH v. SIBLEY, 74 L. J. Ch. 361; 92 L. T. 534; 53 W. R. 328; 21 T. L. R. 329; 49 Sol. Jo. 350.

Testator also bequeathed £8,000 to the same trustees, in trust, after certain life interests; "for all & every the children of T. born or hereafter to be born equally to be divided between them, share & share alike, & to be paid, assigned & transferred to them at their respective ages of twenty-five years, & to be subject to the like descent to the lawful issue of such of them as shall die under the said age of twenty-five years, & under the like conditions & restrictions, & with the like power to apply the interest thereof for their respective maintenance, & in all other points & respects, under & subject to the same rules, regulations, conditions & restrictions as are hereinbefore contained in relation to the several legacies, hereinbefore given to or in trust for the said children respectively"; provided that in case any person to or in trust for whom any bequest, to take effect in remainder or reversion or upon any contingency, was made, should sell or incur his interest under such bequest before the same should take effect in possession, all the bequests in favour of that person should become void. By a codicil testator revoked a power which he had given, by his will, to the trustees, to apply, for the advancement of the legatees, the whole or part of the capital of their legacies, before they attained twenty-five, & directed that the legacies should vest in & be payable, assignable & transferable to them as if no such power were contained in his will:—Held: the trusts declared of both sums, were void for remoteness.

If their shares were to vest in them at twenty-five, & the members of the class who were to take, would not, of necessity & at all events, come into esse during a life in being, the vesting is made to depend upon an event which would not necessarily happen within a life in being & twenty-one years afterwards. It is impossible to separate children who might afterwards come into esse, from those who were already in existence. I think, therefore, that the legacy of £8,000 as well as the legacy of £3,000 is void for remoteness (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—COMPORT v. AUSTEN (1841), 12 Sim. 218; 59 E. R. 1115.

346. ———.]—(1) If testator leaves a legacy absolutely as regards his estate, but restricts the mode of the legatee's enjoyment of it, to secure certain objects for the benefit of the legatee; upon failure of such objects, the absolute gift prevails; but, if there be no such absolute gift as between the legatee & the estate, & particular modes of enjoyment are prescribed, & those modes of enjoyment fail, the legacy forms part of testator's estate, as not having in such event been given away from it.

(2) Here the direction is to divide among the children in manner following, that is to say, sons when they shall attain twenty-three. . . . It is a gift to a class of persons, some of whom may be born after testator's own death, & who are not to have the gift till they are twenty-three; & then, & not till then, & amongst such children, & not other children, the property is to be divided. A gift to divide property among unborn children at twenty-three is a gift void for remoteness; & consequently . . . the moiety given to the sons falls within this rule. It is the same as if none of the sons had attained twenty-three; it is therefore undisposed of, & goes with the residue of the property (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—*LASSENCÉ v. But where there is a gift to a class & the total amount to be taken by any member of the class cannot be ascertained within the period fixed by law, the whole gift is void. Testatrix made a bequest in trust for such of her four nephews & nieces as should be living at the expiration of twelve months after the death of their mother, & the issue then living who should attain the age of twenty-one years, of any of the nephews & nieces who should have died before the expiration of the twelve months:—Held: on the construction of the will, there was no period of distribution fixed except by the gift to the class; & as the members of the class might not be ascertained until the expiration of more than twenty-one years from the death of the mother the whole bequest failed.

Where there is a time fixed at which a fund is to be divided into separate shares, & that time is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, there, as I conceive, each share stands separate from the others, & will take effect or not according as the dispositions of that share do or do not violate the rule against perpetuities; & I conceive it to follow that the valid gift of one share will not be made void by the invalid gift of another share or of a portion of another share, to the donee of that first share . . . I conceive that it is a class gift where the total & ultimate amount of the share to be taken by any one donee cannot be ascertained until all the persons who are to take, & the ultimate proportions in which they are to take, are finally ascertained (FRY, J.).—*BENTINCK v. 369. —[.]—Testator directed his trustees, after the death of the longest liver of his son, his daughter, & any widow whom the son might leave, to sell his real estate & to stand possessed of the proceeds & of the rents & profits until sale, upon trust to pay & apply them "unto & equally amongst all & every the child & children of my son W. & daughter M. share & share alike, & the lawful issue of such of them as may be then dead leaving issue, such issue to be entitled to no more than their parent or respective parents would have been if living." He directed that if his daughter's son then living should die without leaving issue, or leaving issue, all of them should die under age & unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to him under the above trusts to the children of J.; & that if testator's son died without leaving issue, or all of them died under age & unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to them under the trusts aforesaid to the children of J. & M. The heir-at-law claimed the corpus as undisposed of, on the ground that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was void for remoteness as being a gift to a class not ascertainable till at or after the death of the son's widow, who might be a person unborn at testator's death:—Held: the gift was not a gift to such children of the son & daughter as should be living at the period of distribution & the issue of such of them as should be then dead, but a gift to all the children of the son & daughter, with a gift over by way of substitution of the shares of such of them as might die before the period of distribution leaving issue; when the gift over of any share was void for remoteness the original gift remained unaffected; & the heir-at-law had no title.

The result is that there is a gift to a class who must be ascertainable within the prescribed period subject to gifts over of the shares in certain events & if any of those gifts over are invalid, the original gift of those shares remains unaffected (JESSEL, M.R.).—*GOODIER v. M. had one daughter only, pltf., who attained twenty-one, & she was born in the lifetime of testator:—Held: the proviso for resettlement of the shares must be construed as applicable to each share separately; & although it would have been void for remoteness in the case of daughters, born after the death of testator, it was valid in the case of pltf. & therefore she was only entitled to a life interest in the fund.—*Re RUSSELL, DORRELL v. trix, by will, dated in 1845, limited to a daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, & declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish & adopt the Christian, or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, & in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue & go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. J., a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. Pltf., one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both J. & pltf. were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held: (1) the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy; (2) it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, & therefore the share of J. was forfeited; (3) the forfeiture clause must be read in conjunction with the gift over, & therefore, so far as it affected, after the death of the appointor, the share of a child born after the death of the creator of the power, it was void for remoteness, whether such share was appointed for life only or absolutely, & consequently pltf. had not forfeited her share.—*HODGSON v. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his W. estates, & if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his C. estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. Provided always, that the rents of the trust premises should, during the term of twenty-one years from the day next before the day of testator's death, be accumulated by way of compound interest, & the accumulated fund should be held in trust for the child, if only one, or all the children equally, if more than one, of R. who should attain twenty-one. J. died without ever having had a child. R. had six children who attained twenty-one. 389. —.]—Testatrix, after settling a sum of money upon trusts for M., a married niece, for life with power to appoint the income to any husband who might survive her for his life, with remainder to her children, if any, at twenty-one, settled three other sums of money upon such trusts & with such powers in favour of E., B., & J., three unmarried nieces, & their respective husbands & children, if any, as should correspond with the preceding trusts & powers in favour of M. & her husband & children, if any. Testatrix directed that, in case none of her nieces should have any child who should become entitled to the principal sums under the trusts aforesaid, then all the principal sums should, subject to the preceding trusts, be held in trust for a class of persons, ascertained within due limits, in such shares, etc., as the last survivor of the four nieces should by will appoint. M. died without having had a child, & E., B., & J. all died unmarried; & B., the last survivor of them, by her will executed the power in favour of the class mentioned in the ultimate trust. On the death of B., the question arose whether the ultimate trust or gift was not void for remoteness on the ground that, if the power to appoint to husbands had been exercised, the period for ascertaining the class in the ultimate gift might have infringed the rule against perpetuities, because the husbands need not necessarily have been born in the lifetime of the settlor:—Held: it was a case of alternative independent gifts within the principle of Monypenny v. Dering, No. 548, post, & Longhead v. Phelps, No. 376, ante; & inasmuch as the power in favour of husbands was never exercised, the ultimate gift in the events which had happened was valid, & therefore the appointment made by B. was good.

There is in the first instance a limitation . . . to a married niece & her children . . . & then there are limitations to three unmarried nieces & their children, with a power for the nieces to appoint to any husband whom they may marry, who may survive them for a life interest or any less interest. Those husbands, of course, would not necessarily be born in testatrix's lifetime. If, therefore, there had been, not a power to appoint to such husbands, but in each case an actual life interest given to such husbands, & the class of children, to take was not to be ascertained until the death of the survivor of such niece & her husband, the gift to the class would be void for perpetuity, because the class would not be reasonably ascertainable within a life or lives in being & twenty-one years afterwards (FARWELL, J.).—Re BOWLES, PAGE v. PAGE, [1905] 1 Ch. 371; 74 L. J. Ch. 338; 92 L. T. 556.

390. —.]—Testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his three children, & in the events which happened, to the survivors & survivor of them for their lives, with power for any child to appoint by will a life interest to his or her wife or husband, & directed that upon the death of the last survivor of all his children & any husband or wife to whom an appointment had been made, his trustees should sell his real estate & divide the proceeds equally between all his grandchildren then living. No appointment had been made to any husband or wife not born in testator's lifetime. One child died without issue, & the other two had become trustees of the will as well as tenants for life; they had sold part of testator's estate in 1898 as tenants for life, exercising the statutory power, & had also received the purchase-money as trustees:—Held: (1) the trust for sale was not bad for perpetuity, there being alternative independent gifts, on the principle stated in Re Boules, Page v. Page, No. 389, ante, & inasmuch as the power in favour of a husband or wife had not been exercised so as to raise any question of perpetuity, the ultimate gift to the grandchildren was, in the events which had happened, valid.

It seems to me that this case falls within the principle laid down by FARWELL, J., in Re Boules, Page v. Page, No. 389, ante. It is a case in which we have not to deal with limitations made by testator himself in this form, but we are dealing with what will be the effect of the creation under the power of a fresh interest in some unborn person. That brings the case into the class of alternative gifts, one of which may be perfectly good & the other may be distinctly bad, having regard to the rule against perpetuities (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

(2) It has not been contended & it could not be contended that it would be sufficient to find in the will a trust for sale or a future event, if that future event was itself necessarily void on the ground of perpetuity. The only question for us on this part of the case is to say whether at the date this sale took place, there was a trust for sale on a future event, which might or might not be a good trust for sale (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—Re DAVIES & KENT'S CONTRACT, [1910] 2 Ch. 35; 79 L. R. died without ever having had a child, & his next of kin & heir-at-law claimed his residuary estate on the ground that the ultimate gift to charities was void for remoteness:—Held: the ultimate trust for the charities was an alternative & independent gift upon an event ascertainable at the death of R. & was good.—*Re DAVEY, FRISK v. Her personal estate was bequeathed by reference to the trusts of the real estate. S. died without having had a child. At her death there were children of C., daughters who had all attained twenty-one or married:—Held: (a) that the whole gift over on the death of S. was void for remoteness & could not be split up into separate contingencies, so as to be construed as a gift over on one contingency, that of S. having no child; & (b) upon the death of S. there was no intestacy as to the two-fifths but that by reason of the invalidity of the gift over on her death the original absolute gift remained & upon her death passed to her representatives.

Tenant in tail becoming seised in fee.—Testator bequeathed to his exors. & trustees all his personal estate, except such goods as were by his will especially bequeathed, & also except his leasehold estates, which he declared it to be his intention to exonerate from the payment of his debts & legacies, upon trust, in the first place, to pay his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, & legacies; & in case there should be any residue of his personal estate, except as aforesaid, he gave the same to his son R. After giving certain specific legacies, testator devised all his freehold hereditaments to the same trustees, upon trust for his said son R., for life, with remainder to his grandson W. for life, with divers remainders over in tail. Testator gave all his leasehold estates to the same trustees, in trust, to permit the clear rents thereof to be received, taken, & enjoyed by the person for the time being entitled to the freeholds, until such person should by good assurance become seised of the freeholds in fee simple in possession; & then in trust to convey & assign the leaseholds to him:—Held: (1) the limitations of the leaseholds beyond the life estates of R. & W. were void for remoteness; (2) the interest thus improperly attempted to be given did not belong absolutely to W. as the last tenant for life, nor did it pass by the residuary bequest to R., because the exception of the leaseholds out of the residuary gift was not simply for the purpose of making a separate bequest of them, but also to exonerate them from the payment of the debts & legacies; & therefore, beyond W.'s life estate, the leaseholds were undisposed of by the will, & belonged to the next of kin of testator.—*WAINMAN v. 408. On marriage or death of unmarried daughter.—Appointment under power in marriage settlement.—By a marriage settlement in 1793 a fund was settled in trust for the husband & wife successively for life with remainder for children of the marriage as the husband & wife should jointly appoint. In 1835, there being then seven children of the marriage, including three unmarried daughters, the husband & wife appointed out of the fund £1,500 to be paid to each of the three unmarried daughters "who should thereafter marry"; & so long as those three daughters, or any or either of them, should be living & unmarried, directed that the income of the residue of the fund should be paid to them, or such of them as should from time to time be living & unmarried, equally; & "in case one or two only of them should marry," which happened, then that after the death or marriage of such one as should be last living & unmarried the capital of the residue should be paid to the four other children & such of the three unmarried daughters "as should marry as aforesaid," equally:—Held: (1) the ultimate gift over of the residue of the fund was void for remoteness, as the class was not necessarily ascertainable within twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the appointors; (2) the appointment of the three sums of £1,500 was also void for remoteness, as it could not be ascertained whether a daughter would marry within twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the appointors; (3) the appointment of the income of the residue of the fund to the three unmarried daughters was a valid appointment of one-third to each daughter so long as she was living & unmarried; but, so far as it purported to be a gift over of such one-third on her marriage, was void for remoteness.

The question is whether this is good, seeing that the daughters may marry more than twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the husband & wife, & that until a daughter marries, it is necessarily left uncertain what will be taken by the other children, & what is to be taken by them under the appointment or under the provisions of the settlement if there be no appointment. That seems to be obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities (KEKEWICH, J.).—Re GAGE, HILL v. GAGE, [1898] 1 Ch. 498; 67 L. J. Ch. 200; 78 L. T. 347; 46 W. R. 569.

414. —.—(1) A special power which, according to the true construction of the instrument creating it, is capable of being exercised beyond lives in being & twenty-one years afterwards is, by reason of the rule against perpetuities, absolutely void, but if it can only be exercised within the period allowed by the rule, it is a good power, even although some particular exercise of it might be void because of the rule. If a power be given to a person alive at the date of the instrument creating it, it must of course, if exercised at all, be exercised during his life, & is therefore valid. If a power can be exercised only in favour of a person living at the date of the instrument creating it, it must, if exercised at all, be exercised during the life of such person, & is therefore unobjectionable. (2) The instrument itself may expressly limit a period, not exceeding the legal limits, for the exercise of the power; & where the settlor has used language from which the ct. may fairly infer that he contemplated the creation, not of a single power, but of two distinct powers, one of which only is open to objection because of the rule against perpetuities, the ct. will avoid the latter only & will give effect to the power which is not open to this objection. Thus, although a power vested in the trustees for the time being of a settlement has apparently been uniformly looked on as a single & indivisible power, it may be otherwise if the power be limited to A. & B. or other of the trustees of the settlement for the time being. In this case the ct. may treat the settlor as having created one power vested in A. & B. while trustees, & a distinct power vested in their successors, in which case the power vested in A. & B. would be open to no objection on the ground of remoteness.

Testatrix, who was domiciled & died in England, by her will appointed C. & D. exors., & gave all her real & residuary personal estate, except her shares in a certain French co., to "C. & D., hereinafter called 'my trustees,'" upon trust for sale, & to hold the net proceeds, after payment of her debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, upon trust to pay a certain charitable legacy, & to divide the residue into thirteen parts, as to eleven of them upon certain trusts, " & as to two other of such parts upon trust to pay the capital or income thereof, or neither, to my nephew E., or to apply the capital or income thereof, or any part of either, for his benefit, or for the benefit of his wife or any child or children of his as my trustees may in their absolute & uncontrolled discretion consider desirable"; & she gave all her twenty one shares in the French co. "to my trustees" upon trust to sell or retain the same & to hold the same upon trust for certain persons. Seven of the shares were charged with the payment of certain legacies:—Held: (3) if one power only was vested in these trustees, it might, according to the true construction of the will, be exercised during the life of any child of E. whether alive at testatrix's death or born afterwards, & was therefore avoided by the rule against perpetuities; (4) there were two powers vested in the trustees for the time being of the will (a) to pay either capital or income to E., which was only capable of being exercised during his life, & (b) a power to apply either capital or income for the benefit of E., his wife or children, which was capable of being exercised beyond the period allowed by law, & the former power must be upheld & the latter rejected.—*Re DE SOMMIERY, COLENBIER v. 416. Contingency must be within perpetuity period—Power exercisable by will only—Donee alive at creation of power.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for all or such one or more exclusive of the others of the children of his niece, as she should, by her will, appoint; &, in default of appointment, in trust for all her children living at his decease. The niece, by her will, appointed £6,000, part of the stock, to her daughter, for her separate use for life; & after her death, to such persons, etc., as the daughter should, by will, appoint, &, in default of appointment, to the niece's two sons. The two sons & the daughter were the niece's only children, & they were all living at testator's death. After the death of the niece, her two sons & daughter & the husband of the daughter executed a deed by which, after reciting that it was conceived that the testamentary power of appointment given to the daughter, was invalid, as being an excessive execution of the power given to her mother, & that it was also conceived that, if that power should be valid & should not be exercised, than & in either event the reversion of the £6,000 expectant on the daughter's death, belonged to her two brothers & to herself & her husband; the parties, in order to obviate any doubts respecting the same & to carry their mother's intention into effect, assigned the fund to two trustees, in trust for the daughter, for her separate use for life, &, after her death, for the husband for life, & after his death, for the children of the daughter & her husband, & if they should all die under twenty one, in trust for the daughter's next of kin; & the daughter alone was empowered to appoint new trustees of the deed. A few months afterwards, the daughter made a will, in exercise of the power given to her by her mother, & appointed the fund to her husband absolutely. Some time afterwards she executed a deed, by which she appointed a new trustee of the prior deed. Shortly afterwards she died, leaving her husband & four children surviving:—Held: the testamentary power of appointment given to the daughter was valid: the first deed was not intended to operate, unless that power should be either void or not exercised: the daughter's will was a good execution of the power, & was not revoked by the second deed.—*PHIPSON v. As to the question of perpetuity, the arguments adduced have no bearing whatever. There is no doubt that, under the power which original testator by his will gave to his granddaughter, she might have given a power to appoint to children born after his death, & might, therefore, have contrived to give interests which would be void under the rules against perpetuities. But it does not follow that because the original power

(1) The rule against perpetuities requires that not only the extreme limit of the class of persons who may take, but the actual persons who are to take, should be ascertained within the prescribed period.

The rule against perpetuities requires, in my view, the ascertainment within the period not only of the extreme limits of the class of persons who may take, but of the very persons who are to take, & that because the rule is aimed at the practical object of telling who can deal with the property, & if you cannot tell who are entitled to the property, but only who may become entitled to the property, the property is practically tied up (FRY, J.).

Testatrix directed property to be sold at a period beyond the limit prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, & the proceeds to be divided between such of her grandchildren living at the time of the sale in such proportions as testatrix's sister should by will appoint:—Held: an appointment made by a will of the sister before the sale was a bad exercise of the power; as the class of grandchildren living at the time of the sale could not be ascertained within the prescribed limit, the gift was void for remoteness, notwithstanding that the entire class of grandchildren must be ascertained within the prescribed limit.

(2) Semle: a power of appointment among such members of a class as shall survive a contingency cannot be exercised until the contingency takes place.

(3) The second objection, which I think is equally fatal, is this, that C. H. exercised a power of appointment amongst a class of persons who were not ascertained at the time she exercised it. . . . I think that where a power of appointment amongst a class of people is given, the appointor must know the class—must be able to ascertain the class amongst whom he or she is so to divide the property (FRY, J.).—*BLIGHT v. E., upon her marriage, purported to appoint the fund to the trustees of her marriage settlement. the income thereof to each of her two sons & three daughters for life, & after the death of each daughter leaving a husband to pay the income of her share to her husband, during his life, & after the death of each of her sons & the survivor of each of her daughters & any husband with whom she might intermarry, leaving children or more remote issue living at the time or such death, in trust for the children or more remote issue of such son or daughter as he or she might appoint & in default of appointment for the children then living & the issue of such as might be then dead, & in case of the death of any son or daughter without leaving issue, then, after the death & failure of issue of each son, & after the death of the survivor of each daughter so dying & whose issue should so fail & any husband with whom she might have intermarried, then the trustees were to stand possessed of the share to the income of which such son or daughter was entitled, to pay the income thereof equally amongst the survivors of testatrix's sons & daughters during their lives; & on the death of the last survivor of the sons or daughters & the husbands of daughters there was an ultimate trust of the corpus for the children of sons & daughters who had died leaving children then living & the issue then living of children who should be then dead. Testatrix died in 1881, leaving her two sons & three daughters her surviving. E., one of the daughters, who at the date of the will was married, died intestate in 1903 without having had any children, & leaving a husband who died in 1909:—Held: the gift over of the income of her share to the survivors of testatrix's sons & daughters was not void for remoteness, but there was no valid gift over of the corpus of her share.

(2) Another daughter, F., was also married at the date of the will. Her husband died in 1895, & she had not married again. She had nine children, all of whom were living & had attained twenty-one. By a deed poll in 1907 in exercise of her power she irrevocably appointed her share to her nine children in equal shares, subject to her life interest:—Held: the limitations, by the joint operation of the will & deed of appointment created, of the share to the income of which F. was entitled for her life were not such as must necessarily take effect, if at all, within the limits of the rule against perpetuities; & consequently the power had not been validly exercised.

(3) Semble: if F. had appointed merely life interests to her children or even remote issue in existence at her death or had appointed interests to her children or issue which by the very terms of their creation must vest & take effect if at all within the limits allowed by the rule against perpetuities such appointments would have been a valid exercise of the power.—*Re NORTON, NORTON v. 429. Period runs from time to exercise.—Power exercisable by will.]—TAYLOR v. FROBISHER, No. 92, ante.

430. ———.]—A power to appoint by will is a general power within the scope of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27, so that where a person having a power to appoint real or personal estate by will makes a residuary disposition of his property without reference to the power, the will will be construed as an execution of the power. But such a general power does not constitute ownership; so that, for the purpose of considering the question whether the exercise of the power be or be not void for remoteness, the real or personal estate subject to the power will be deemed to be the property of the donor, & not of the donee of the power.

J. bequeathed sums amounting to £5,000 after the deaths of certain persons mentioned, upon trust for H. for life, & after her death upon trust for such person or persons as H. should, by her last will & testament, appoint. H. made a will not referring in any way to the power, but leaving the residue of her property in trust for her daughter S. for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, & after her death in trust for the children of S., who, being a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry. S. was born after the death of J. P.:—Held: (1) the will of H. must be construed as an execution of the power created by the will of J. according to Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 27; (2) the exercise of the power was void for remoteness.—Re POWELL'S TRUSTS (1869), 39 L. for such only or surviving child; & in case there should not be any issue of the marriage, or all such issue should die without having become entitled, then upon other trusts:—Held: the word "issue" in the power of appointment must be construed in its strict technical sense, & an appointment by the wife to the children of a deceased son was valid.

448. ———.]—By a marriage settlement, four different portions of property were limited in the following manner: first, the wife was given a general power of appointment over £3,000 to take effect upon her own death; secondly, the wife had a special power of appointment over the residue of the stocks & funds, to be exercised in favour of a particular class of relations, & to take effect, not upon her own death, but upon the death of her husband; thirdly, the wife had a general power of appointment over the plate, furniture, etc., but not to take effect until her husband's death; fourthly, the wife had a general power to dispose of her jewels, trinkets, etc., to take effect upon her own death. The wife's will, which was dated before the Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), & was properly executed in the form prescribed for the execution of the powers in the settlement, commenced, I, S. M., do, by virtue of the power & authority reserved to me by my marriage settlement, hereby make, publish, & declare this to be my last will & testament. Testatrix then referred specially to her power of appointing the £3,000, & disposed of it. The third & fourth portions of the property she disposed of without referring to her power. Lastly, she gave & bequeathed, directed & appointed all the rest, residue & remainder of her moneys, & other her personal estate, of whatsoever description, amongst the class of relations pointed out by the settlement, but did not refer to the power. As to the first, third, & fourth portions, no question was raised; but as to the second portion, being the residue, it was held, that the will was a good execution of the power. By the settlement, the trustees were, after the death of the husband, in case of his surviving his wife, to stand possessed of the residue, above referred to as the second portion of the property, in trust for all & every or such one or more of the wife's relations in blood, at the time of her decease, within the eighth degree of consanguinity to her, in such shares & proportions, & with such future or executory or other trusts, being for the benefit of the said relations in blood of the wife within the degree aforesaid, as the wife should by will direct or appoint:—Held: the appointment which was made by the wife was valid, notwithstanding that the persons who were to take as appointees, & the shares & interests which they were to take under the appointment, were made contingent upon a future event; & although the fund was appointed not entirely to objects of the power, but partly to objects of the power & partly to strangers, the appointment was nevertheless valid pro tanto, that is, it was valid quoad those who were objects of the power, & invalid as to those persons who were not properly objects of the power.

B. Duration of Power.

464. Duration depends on construction of instrument creating power.—A power given to the trustees of a settlement or will to sell land comprised in it can be exercised by them after the property has, under the trusts, become absolutely vested in persons who are sui juris, if on the construction of the instrument it appears to be the intention of the settlor or testator that it should be then exercised, provided that the power in its creation was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, & that the cestuis que trust have not put an end to the trusts by electing to take the property as it stands.

I must observe that there is the greatest possible distinction between the determination of a power under the instrument which created it, & its extinction by the concurrence of the persons who are entitled to take the property which is the subject of the power (FRY, J.).—Re COTTON'S TRUSTEES & LONDON SCHOOL BOARD (1882), 19 Ch. 465. —.]—The question of the duration of a power in a settlement is, if the rule against perpetuities is not infringed, one of intention. A power of sale given by a will to trustees to enable them to perform a trust for the maintenance, out of capital as well as income, of a lunatic during his life is not determined by the lunatic's becoming absolutely entitled to the property so long as he is unable to call for a conveyance.—Re JUMP, GALLOWAY v. HOPE, [1903] 1 Ch. 129; 72 L. J. Ch. 16; 87 L. T. 502; 51 W. R. 260.

466. Power changing nature of interests—Outside limit of rule.—Leasehold estates bequeathed, in trust to pay the rents & profits to the persons for the time being entitled under the limitations of real estate, devised in strict settlement: with power to the trustees, at any time with consent of the persons so entitled, or, if minors, at their own discretion, to sell, and invest the produce in real estate to the same uses.

The leasehold estates vest absolutely in the tenant in tail upon his birth; & the power is void.

Upon further consideration as to the leasehold estate, I think, that power of sale is void; for it may travel through minorities for two centuries & if it is bad to the extent, in which it is given, you cannot model it to make it good. I think, the soundest ground is, that the power is bad (LORD ELDON, C.).—WARE v. POLHILL (1805), 11 Ves. 257; 32 E. R. 1087, L. C.

one-fifths of his residuary real & personal estate, gave another one-fifth in trust for his son W. & his children; & the remaining one-fifth in trust for his daughter till twenty-five or marriage; with a direction, that if she married under that age, her fifth should be conveyed & settled upon the trusts therein mentioned; & he gave the trustees a general power of sale during the continuance of the trusts thereby reposed in them. W. survived testator, & died, leaving infant children; & upon the daughter's marriage under twenty-five, a settlement was executed, which, reciting that no part of the real estate had been sold, though it was intended that the same should be sold under the power contained in the will, assigned to trustees, their exors., etc., all the daughter's share of the moneys to be produced by the sale of the real estate, upon certain trusts in favour of her intended husband, herself, & her issue.

I must not pass over an objection raised as to the whole of the power under the will, namely, that it was too remote & tended to a perpetuity. Being of opinion that the trust as to W.'s share would determine upon his children attaining twenty-one, & that the trusts as to E.'s share would determine upon her attaining twenty-five, or marrying, this objection may be considered as disposed of; but if it were otherwise, the sale in question is within the permitted period & there would not, I think, be much doubt of its validity until the expiration of that period (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—WOOD v. the others to living persons for life, with remainder to their children in fee. An unlimited power of sale over the whole estate was given to the trustees:—Held: this power of sale was valid & could be exercised over the whole estate, so long as any of the trusts of any of the shares remained to be performed.

If an estate be given to trustees, in trust for certain persons, as tenants in common in fee, with a power of sale given to the trustees without any limit, the power of sale would be invalid, because, if it were exercisable at all, it would be exercisable in perpetuum & as long as the estates given to the cestuis que trust lasted. But if the estate was given to trustees in trust for certain persons for life, in succession, with an ultimate remainder to persons in fee, & a power of sale was entrusted to those trustees, the power of sale would, in my opinion, subsist until the trust was exhausted; in other words, until the persons entitled to the remainder in fee had a right to call upon the trustees to convey them the absolute interest in the shares (ROMILLY, M.R.).—TAITE v. On June 20, 1913, the two trustees named in the settlement, pursuant to the foregoing trust for sale, contracted to sell the real estate to deft., who took the objection that the trust for sale was void for remoteness:—Held: the determination of the term & the commencement of the trust for sale arising at one & the same moment, the trust was not void for remoteness on the ground that it was limited to take effect "at the expiration" of the term; according to the true construction of the settlement the term commenced from midnight on May 12, & therefore the trust for sale was not void for remoteness on the ground of exceeding a term of twenty-one years from its creation.

(2) Semle: if the trust for sale had otherwise been void for remoteness it would not have been saved by the fact that it was being exercised by the two trustees originally named in the settlement.—ENGLISH v. ##### A. In General.

494. 497. ———.]—Testator directed that, at his sons attained twenty-five, his exors. should pay them a share of his estate & effects, it being his will that his sons & daughters should receive equal shares of his estate. As his daughters attained twenty-five, the exors. were to invest £1,000 each for them for life, & the difference between this & their share paid to them. In case any daughter should die without issue, the £1,000 was to be divided amongst such of his children as might be then living, & the issue of such as might be dead, share & share alike, the issue to take the like share as the parent would, if living, have been entitled to:—Held: the gift over was on an indefinite failure of issue; there was an absolute gift of the £1,000 in the first instance to the daughters, which had not effectually been cut down, & the daughters were absolutely entitled to the £1,000.

Then comes the gift over on an indefinite failure of issue, which is bad & must be disregarded. The result is, that the original gift remains unaffected, & the daughters take absolute interests in these sums of £1,000 (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WEBSTER v. PARR (1858), 26 Beav. 236; 53 E. R. 888.

twenty-five to pay the rents & profits [equally] for the maintenance of her children, &, on the youngest child attaining twenty-five, to sell & divide the proceeds among all the children of the tenant for life then living & the issue of such as should be dead:—Held: the trust for maintenance was separable from the rest & was not bad for remoteness, whether the trust for sale was so or not.—*GOODING v. A. died a bachelor. Testator's heir also died:—Held: the heir's personal representative was entitled to the £5,000.

511. ———.]—Testator bequeathed a picture to his eldest son J. for life, & then to his second son C. for life, & then to his daughter M. for life, & after her death to the first & every other son then living of J. successively, according to seniority, for their respective lives, & then to the first & every other son then living of C. successively according to seniority for their respective lives, & then to the first & every other son of his daughter M. successively according to seniority for their respective lives, & then to his own right heirs, it being his strong desire that the picture should not be sold but should always remain in the possession of some descendant of C. F. of T. Testator devised the residue of his real & personal estate upon trust for his two sons, J. & C., in equal shares, absolutely. On the death of testator on June 7, 1906, the exors. handed the picture to the eldest son, J., & on his death on July 27, 1918, they gave it to C., who now held it. By clause 6 of his will J. gave his daughter, F., all his pictures other than those made heirlooms, & by clause 23 he gave "my pictures" at it. to be enjoyed as heirlooms with settled real estate. By clause 36 of his will he left residuary estate to his three sons in certain proportions. A deed of family arrangement, dated Mar. 5, 1919, was entered into between the children of J. & the exors. & trustees of his will, wherein it was recited that the pictures at R. should be treated as having passed to F. under clause 6 of the will, & clause 23 was (inter alia) revoked in pursuance of a power contained in the will. Questions were raised as to the validity of the limitations in the settlmt. of the picture, & who was now entitled to it:—Held: the bequests of the picture were only good so far as they included the sons of J. living at the death of M., & all the subsequent limitations, including the ultimate gift to the right heirs of testator, were void for remoteness; (2) subject to the valid life interests the picture formed part of the residuary estate of testator & went to his two sons in equal shares; & the interest of J. in his undivided moiety of the picture passed under his will & the deed of family arrangement to F.—*Re BACKHOUSE, FINDLAY v. ### SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

517. Restriction void.]—Testatrix, in pursuance of a power in her marriage settlement, appointed a fund to her son C. for life, with remainder to his eldest son, provided that, in the event of their refusal to comply with a request by her son A. to release their interests in certain other property, their interests in the fund were to go over to her son A. absolutely:—Held: the condition was void as being contrary to the rule against perpetuities.—*Re STAVELEY, DYKE v. power of anticipation, & after her decease, to her general appointees by deed or will, & in default, to her exors. or administrators:—Held: such an appointment was not void as fettering the property beyond the legal limits, but the restraint upon anticipation might be rejected, & the rest of the appointment sustained.

If the restriction be not rejected, it is said that it will make the whole void. Rather than decide that, the ct. will reject the limitation & thus leave the rest of the appointment valid (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—FRY v. CAPPER (1853), Kay, 163; 2 W. R. 130; 69 E. R. 70.

519. ———.]—Semble: Where a bequest is made to persons in esse for life, with remainder to their unborn children, with a general direction that the female children shall take for their separate & inalienable use, such restriction against alienation is too remote & void.

Under several bequests to living persons for life, with remainder to their children born & unborn, with a general proviso that the shares of females shall be for their separate inalienable use:—Held: the restriction against anticipation applied only to the tenants for life, in consequence of a direction for payment to the children & a proviso that their receipts should be good discharges.

I do not express any opinion on the point, principally argued, as to remoteness; but my strong impression is, that it would be too remote, & that this ct. could never, after a life or lives in being & twenty-one years, permit any estate to be inalienable (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*ARMITAGE v. (2) A similar appointment was made to another daughter unmarried at the date of the appointment, who afterwards married:—Held: marriage did not operate as an adoption of the trusts of the fund so as to establish the validity of the restraint clause.—Re TEAGUE'S SETTLEMENT (1870), L. 524. ———.]—On June 5, 1860, A. & B., in exercise of the power of appointment in favour of children contained in their marriage settlement, dated in 1830, appointed £3,500 to their daughter M., afterwards M. S.

By the marriage settlement of N. & M., dated June 6, 1860, M. assigned the £3,500 to the trustees, upon trusts under which N. had the first life interest, & in default of children, M. had a general testamentary power of appointment. There was also a covenant by N. & M. that if they, or either of them, should during the coverture become entitled to any real or personal property, except certain specified interests, the same should be forthwith assured to the trustees.

On June 20, 1860, A. & B. appointed that a moiety of the residue unappointed of the trust funds under the settlement of 1830 should, after the decease of the survivor of them, go to M., during her coverture, for her sole & separate use, without power of anticipation, her receipt to be a sufficient discharge for the payment thereof. There was a proviso that if M. should die in the lifetime of N., leaving no children, the same moiety should go to the brother of N. absolutely, & that if M. should survive her husband, the same moiety should go to M. absolutely.

M. died in 1887, leaving children, & having by her will appointed & bequeathed all her property to N., & appointed him sole exor. A. & B. had both pre-deceased M.:—Held: (1) the appointment by A. & B., of June 20, 1860, showed an intention to exclude N., & any interest which he would take if the fund was caught by his marriage settlement; though the restraint on anticipation must be rejected, yet, taken together with the gift over in default of children & the receipt clause, it showed an intention that the separate use should apply only to the income accruing during the particular coverture, & M. should have no power of disposition over the corpus.

(2) Such a limitation was clearly good; & therefore, the fund having accrued during the coverture, the corpus was caught by the after-acquired property clause.—SHUTE v. HOGGE (1888), 58 L. T. 546.

530. ———.] — Testator by his will gave his residuary estate to his wife, two daughters, & a son for life, the interests of the wife & daughters to be without power of anticipation, & after the death of the survivor he gave his estate to the then & future children of his son in equal proportions. By a codicil testator declared that the bequests to any female taking any beneficial interest under his will should be for her separate use, but so that she might not anticipate any part of the property to which she might become entitled, & he also declared the receipt of any female taking an interest under his will should be a good & sufficient discharge to his trustees for the money after the same should have actually accrued due. The survivor of the wife, daughters, & son died in Jan. 1902. The son left five children living at his death, of whom two were married women :—Held : the restraint on anticipation was valid, not being void for remoteness, but it only lasted during the existence of the prior life interests both as to income & corpus, & determined when the property fell into possession in Jan. 1902.—*Re MILLWARD, STEEDMAN v. 533. Direction to settle following absolute gift.—Power to appoint amongst children, or some or one of them, with limitations over for benefit of one or more of such children, or his or their issue. The donee of the power appointed equal shares to his daughters respectively for life, for their separate use; then to their issue, as they, the daughters respectively, should appoint; in default, amongst the issue equally :—Held : subject to the life interest of the wives for their separate use, the shares appointed to the daughters belonged to them & to their husbands in their right.

The trusts of the shares appointed to the daughters are void for remoteness, so far as those trusts relate to the issue of the daughters; but the same are good so far as they are made to the separate use of the daughters for their lives; & subject to such separate interest, the shares so appointed belong to the daughters, & to their husbands in right of the wives (LEACH, M.R.).—CARVER v. Some of those trusts were to the children for life, with remainder to their children, &, as regarded the fund subject to the power, the appointment to grandchildren was void for remoteness:—Held: the children took absolutely in the first instance, & the subsequent attempt to limit the absolute gift being void, the children took the fund absolutely.—*STEPHENS v. (2) Testator bequeathed a legacy to his son, & after his decease & on the youngest of the son's sons attaining twenty-one, to divide it equally between the son's sons & the issue of deceased son's sons who should attain twenty-one, the issue to take the share which their father would have taken if living. use without power of anticipation, & after her death in favour of her children. There was evidence that testatrix & her husband had forgotten the existence of the settlement. The question was whether or not the will operated as an exercise of the power of appointment:—Held: (1) the evidence as to the settlement having been forgotten could not be acted upon; & if the will were not regarded as an exercise of the power, words would have to be struck out of the will, upon the face of which there was a clear intention to exercise any testamentary power the testatrix might have; (2) the daughters took their shares of the settled funds free from the fetters attempted to be imposed by the subsequent direction.—*Re BOYD, NEILD v. 548. —.]—J. M., by his will, devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, & subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, & after his decease for the first son of P. M. for life, & after his decease for the first son of such first son & the heirs male of his body, & in default of such issue, for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests & limitations, & in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. M. for life, & after his decease for T. G. M. the eldest son of T. M. for life, & after his decease for the first son of T. G. M. & the heirs male of his body, & in default of issue of the body of T. G. M., for every other son of T. M. successively for the like estates & interests, & on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M., upon trust for him, his heirs & assigns for ever; P. M. never had any children:—Held: (1) P. M. took an estate for life with remainder to his first unborn son, if such son had been born, & all the remainders over were void; (2) effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. & his sons in default of issue of the body of P. M., etc., as an independent clause, & it was consequently valid.

(3) Although by the doctrine of cy-près or by implication, as applied to the construction of a will, an estate may be carried otherwise than in the exact form & manner indicated by testator, yet it must always be in favour of a class or part of a class of persons intended to be provided for by testator.

(4) In construing wills effect may in certain cases be given to the general intent at the expense of a particular intent, but this is not to be done without an actual necessity.

(5) Where an estate is so limited to A. as would generally raise by implication an estate tail, but there are added limitations to the children of A. which are void for remoteness, it is not a general rule to reject these limitations as unimportant & to give to A. an estate tail, although cases may arise in which this would be done in favour of the clear intention of testator.

(6) Where there are gifts over which are void for perpetuity, & there is a subsequent & independent clause on a gift over which is within the line of perpetuity, effect cannot be given to such clause unless it will accord with previous valid limitations. A gift over made in words comprising only one event will not be construed as made on two events, although in point of fact it may consist very reasonably of two branches, unless it is so expressed by testator.

(7) The rule of law forbids the raising of successive estates by purchase to unborn children, that is, to an unborn child of an unborn child (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).

(8) The cts. have gone at least to this extent, that they will not hold a gift over made in words comprising only one event as made on two events, although in point of fact, it may consist very reasonably of two branches, unless testator has himself so expressed it (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).—MONTPENNY v. DERING (1852), 2 De G. M. & G.

For the purposes of this rule there is no difference between freehold & copyhold estate.

Where a settlement of real estate contained a power to the trustees to convert the real estate & gave a special power of appointment over the property, in considering the application of the rule the nature & quality of the property must be regarded as at the time when the appointment became operative & not as at the date of the settlement by which the power was given.

By a settlement dated in 1861 freehold lands were conveyed by A. to a trustee in fee upon trust to pay the net income to A. for life, & after his death upon trust to pay out of the income an annuity, & subject thereto upon trust to convey the estate as A. should by will appoint. A., who died in 1887, by his will appointed the lands to trustees, upon certain trusts by way of settlement:—Held: in 1893, when the annuitant was still living & the lands were still vested in the original trustee, the beneficiaries under A.'s will had nevertheless equitable estates in the lands, & not merely equitable executory interests.—*Re CLARKE'S SETTLEMENT TRUST, WANKLYN v. SECT. 2.—THE CY-PRÈS DOCTRINE.*SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

567. Statement of rule.—(1) Personalty settled on marriage for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, then to & among all & every the children & grandchildren, or issue, in such shares, under such restrictions, at such times, & in such manner, as they or the survivor should appoint by deed or deeds, or by will; for want of appointment to all & every the children, & grandchildren, or issue, living at the decease of the survivor, equally, payable at twenty one or marriage; if but one, to that one; provided, that in case of no appointment, the issue of any children dead should not have a greater share than their parents would have had; issue only are within the power; but in any degree: but an appointment to any issue not living must be restrained to twenty-one years, after lives in being at the creation of the power otherwise it is void, even as to such as come in esse within those limits; but on marriage of a daughter interests may be given to her children generally, & to the husband. What is ill appointed goes as in default of appointment; but children of a living parent cannot take under the proviso.

(2) The doctrine of cy-près does not apply to personal; therefore where under a power to appoint personal to children or issue, an appointment is made to a son for life; then among all his children; if none, to him, his exors., etc.; the limitation to his children being void, because not restrained within the legal bounds, cannot be made good cy-près.

(3) Preceding limitations under an appointment being void, subsequent limitations, though within the power, cannot be accelerated; & are void also; though the objects of the prior limitations never come in esse.

(4) An unborn child of a person in esse may be made tenant for life, if beyond that, the absolute interest is disposed of.

(5) Where real estate is under a power of appointment limited in strict settlement, if the children cannot take as purchasers, the intention shall be executed cy-près by construing it an estate tail.

(6) Wherever there is a power to appoint among persons capable of such appointment, & they come in esse at the particular times to make the appointment good, a sum appointed, as in this case, to the daughter, upon marriage, though modified with respect to the objects of the marriage, is a good appointment, not to the objects of the marriage, but to the daughter herself; & this appointment is a good appointment to her; though if it had been done by will & independent of any modification introduced by the daughter, it would not have been good (ARDEN, M.R.).—ROUTLEDGE v. DORRIL (1794), 2 Ves. 357; 30 E. R. 671.

568. Nature—Rule of construction of wills.]—BRUDENELL v. ELWES*, No. 573, post.

569. ———.]—Devise to A., the daughter of testator, for life, & after her decease to all & every the child or children of A., male or female, begotten or to be begotten, & their assigns, for their respective lives; & after the decease & respective deceases of such child or children of A., to all & every child or children of all & every such child or children of A., male or female, to be begotten, & the heirs of his, her, & their respective body & bodies, as tenants in common; & in case of the death of any of said children of such child or children of A., & failure of issue of his, her, or their body or bodies respectively, then as well the original as the accrued share of such of them so dying without issue to go to the survivors & survivor, others or other of them, as tenants in common, if more than one; & for default of such issue, over. A. had three children born in the lifetime of testator, & living at his decease, & one born after testator's death. One of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A. without issue:—Held: inasmuch as the children of the afterborn child of A. could not take as purchasers, the devise would be supported according to the rule of cy-près or approximation, by giving an estate tail to the afterborn child of A.; the rule of cy-près, being an arbitrary principle of construction, introduced to effect the intention of testator in the exigency of a particular case, was not to be applied, except when the necessity of the case required it; & therefore, although the devise was to the children of A. as a class, the children of A. born in testator's lifetime would take estates for life, & the estates devised to the children of the afterborn child would alone be altered.

To determine the validity of a given set of limitations, the will must be applied to the facts of that particular case, as they stood at the death of testator, & not as they stood at the date of the will (WIGRAM, V.-C.).

It is clear that for the purpose of determining whether the whole of the class can take, I must look at the events as they existed at the death of testator. I cannot wait for subsequent events, so as to see whether a difficulty will be created by the birth of other children (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—VANDERPLANK v. KING (1843), 3 Hare, 1; 12 L. J. 570. ———.]—(1) Where an estate for life is given by clear words, the mere imposition of a charge on the tenant for life will not have the effect of enlarging the estate.

(2) Testator, by a will written on the pages of a small notebook, divided his property into three classes, marked No. 1, No. 2, No. 3. He devised these classes of property to persons designated by letters. The order of "succession" was marked in one page (54) of his will. This page contained the words "The eldest & other sons to inherit before the next letter." The persons designated by the letters were all named in a card, which was referred to in the will, & which card was with the will admitted to probate. K. was testator's wife, to whom was given an estate for life in all the classes of the property. The will required implicit obedience to certain orders of testator on the part of "the individual first to inherit after K."; & if not, "the property aforesaid set down & particularised in No. 1 to go to M., if not to L., & afterwards to his eldest lawfully begotten son, etc." There were similar expressions with regard to N. & O. The card showed that these two letters were intended for the eldest sons of two nephews, but who were then unborn. The property No. 1 consisted of very large sums in stock, which the exors. of the will were to invest in the purchase of real estate; & in page 54 L. was named as the person to take No. 1 after the life estate of K. A grandson was "to inherit before the next-named in the entail or any one of his sons." Class No. 2 consisted of a small estate in land, & by page 54, O. was, as to that, to succeed to K. & the estate there given to O. was expressly a life estate, with remainder to his eldest & other sons in tail male; & it was there also said "a grandson legitimate shall inherit before a younger son." Class No. 3 consisted of certain estates in Suffolk; the "succession" there was (page 54) "first to K. then to M.," & the devise (page 47) was "first to K. & then to M., & afterwards to his eldest legitimate son, & then to his other legitimate sons in order of primogeniture, provided, but not else, the eldest have no issue male; if he have, it will go to him, & so on to the other sons in like manner. After the decease of K., I repeat, I bequeath all the property aforesaid to M. & his heirs male, in the manner aforesaid, as in the case of L., etc., at page 2, & I mean & order that this mode shall prevail throughout the whole entail, under precisely the same injunctions":—Held: reading all the parts of the will together, L. only took a life estate in No. 1, with remainder to his eldest & other sons in tail male; this was not an executory trust.

The cts. have in recent times got over the difficulty of these void limitations to unborn issue of a person who is himself unborn, & is the supposed parent of unborn issue, by the application of the doctrine of cy-près, that is, if you attempt to give effect to the limitations as they stand, the law will declare them void to a certain extent, but will also carry the intention of testator into effect to a certain extent. An unborn son will no doubt take for life; but on that limitation you cannot superadd limitations to the issue of that unborn son as purchasers. The law therefore . . . does step in on the doctrine of cy-près, & says that the parent himself shall take an estate tail, which will comprise in it the issue which testator intended to provide for. The doctrine is not to be carried any further (LORD ST. LEONARDS).

(3) In coming to that conclusion you do not put on the same words different meanings, because you hold that testator in every case meant to make the parent tenant for life, with remainder to his first & other sons, born or unborn, as purchasers; but in the particular case of an unborn son, you do, in favour of the general intention, give a construction which you do not give to those limitations that require no such aid (LORD ST. LEONARDS).—EAST v. TWYFORD (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 517; 22 L. T. O. S. 173; 10 E. R. 564, H. L. Annotations:—Generally, Mentd. Re De Lanczy (1869), L. R. 4 Exch. 345; *Hurton v. The doctrine of cy-près established by Humberston v. Humberston, No. 570, post, is applicable to such a devise, & not merely to a will of an executory character.

This doctrine is a rule of construction, & when the ct. finds that the object expressed by testator is to give to A. an estate for life, to A.'s eldest son another estate for life, & to his eldest son a third estate for life, & so on, the ct. will carry that intention into effect as nearly as it can by giving to A. an estate for life, & to his eldest son, if unborn at the death of testator, an estate in tail male or, if he be alive at the death of testator, an estate for life, with a remainder to his eldest son in tail male (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—*PARFITT v. 573. Not to be extended.]—A power of appointment under a marriage settlement unto & among all or any the child or children of the marriage for such estates as the husband & wife, or the survivor of them, should from time to time, either with or without power of revocation, direct, limit, or appoint, may be executed by the survivor, after a joint appointment reserving to them & the survivor a power of revocation & appointment. But under such power, if the second appointment be to the daughter of the marriage for life, remainder to the eldest son for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the first & other sons in tail, etc., remainder to the daughter in fee, all the limitations subsequent to that to the eldest son for life are void, as being an excess beyond the power; & the ultimate remainder dependent upon such intermediate limitations, though made in favour of one of the objects of the power, is also void; & shall not be accelerated by the event of such void intermediate limitations not having taken effect, for want of issue male of the eldest son, etc., to whom the appointment was made. For an appointment not good in its creation will not become so by subsequent circumstances, & such an appointment, being by deed, cannot be construed cy-près, so as to give the sons estates tail, as perhaps might have been the case if the appointment had been by will.

It is equally clear that she did not intend that the subsequent limitation over to J. C. should be accelerated; but it was made to depend upon the intermediate limitations to the issue of her brothers, & she was not to take until their issue male was extinct (LORD KENYON, C.J.).

The doctrine of cy-près goes to the utmost verge of the law, even in the construction of wills; & we must take care that it does not run wild. But it has never been applied to the construction of deeds (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—BRUDENELL v. ELWES (1801), 1 East, 442; 102 E. R. 171; subsequent proceedings, (1802), 7 Ves. 382, L. C.

"to be so secured that he may only receive the interest during his life; & after his decease, to the heir male of his body, & so on in succession to the heir-at-law, male or female"; with a direction that the principal sum is never to be broken into, but the interest only to be received, "his intent being that there should always be the interest, to support the name of Cobb as a private gentleman."

Though the intention be manifest to give only a life interest to W. C., yet there being nothing to show that "heir male" was not used in a strict technical sense, held that W. C. took the absolute interest, the words being such as would create an estate tail of freehold property.

Scrus, if the words "for life" had been added to the words "heir male," in which case the latter words might have been construed to be a mere designatio personae:—Held: the declaration that the principal stock should not be broken into, not sufficient to turn the heir into a tenant for life, being like an attempt at perpetual restraint of alienation, which, in the case of land, would not prevent the creation of an estate tail.—*BRITTON v. 598. ————.]—Testator, who died in 1873, by his will appointed three trustees, & devised & bequeathed to them, their heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, all his real & leasehold estate "upon trust to receive for or permit my son W. to receive the rents, issues & profits during his life of" two specified freehold hereditaments, he keeping the same in repair & paying the expenses of insuring the same against fire, & the taxes & other outgoings affecting the same. Then followed a proviso that if W. should do or suffer anything to deprive himself of the personal enjoyment of any of the rents, etc., the trust thereinbefore declared should "immediately cease & determine," & the rents, etc., should be received by the trustees during the then residue of W.'s life, " & be applied to & for the support & maintenance or use & benefit of the lawful issue for the time being, if any, of W." as therein provided; but, if W. should have no issue then living, testator empowered his trustees to apply the income as far as possible to secure its application for W.'s personal enjoyment & prevent the same "from becoming the property of his alienees or creditors"; but if in certain circumstances, which did not happen, W. should be absent from England, testator directed his trustees until his return & afterwards to pay a weekly sum to X. & to invest & accumulate the rest of this income. Next followed a trust to "permit" testator's wife "to receive the rents, issues & profits during her life" of other freehold properties & some leasehold houses, & a trust to sell as soon as convenient after testator's decease some other leasehold properties & also, after his wife's death, the leaseholds given to his wife for life, & to pay the proceeds of one of the other leaseholds, not given to her, to his wife. Then testator declared that if W. should not be in England at the time of testator's death, an absence which did not occur, but should return within ten years, he was to have the surplus income of the property in which a life interest had been given to him & of the accumulation thereof after paying the weekly sum; but if W. should not have returned within the ten years testator directed his trustees to pay the surplus income & investments thereof to J. W., & "to permit & empower" him to receive the rents, etc., for his own life of the two freeholds given in trust for W. for life, subject to an annuity of £50 to X. in lieu of the weekly sum. Then testator said that on W.'s death, if, as happened, he should have returned, he devised the same two freeholds "unto the lawful issue male in succession of the said W., so that every elder son & his issue may be preferred to every younger son & his issue male, & so that every such son may take an estate for his life, with remainder to his first & every subsequent son successively, according to seniority, in tail male; & on failure of such issue, to the said J. W. & his issue male," charged with the annuity to X., "for the same estates & in the same order as my said hereditaments are hereinbefore limited to the first & every subsequent son of the said W.," & on the failure of such issue as aforesaid of W. & J. W., testator gave the lastly referred to hereditaments unto J. H., a nephew of testator, "for his life, with remainder to his issue male, for the same estates & in the same order as the said hereditaments are hereinbefore limited to the first & every subsequent son of the said W." Then, if W. was present in England, as he was, testator in that event, on the decease of testator's wife, gave the freeholds in which she had a life interest, charged with the £50 annuity, "unto the said W. for his life, but subject to the provisoes & conditions aforesaid, & subject thereto, I devise the whole of the last-mentioned freehold . . . premises to the same persons, in the same order, & in like manner as I have hereinbefore devised my other freehold estate." Testator's widow died in 1878. W. died in 1905, without having had male issue. J. W. died in 1908, without having had male issue. J. H. died in 1906, having had four sons, all born in testator's lifetime, J. E., Y. H., W. G., & S. S. died leaving a son J. S. J. E. died without issue in 1913, & Y. H. died in 1910, without male issue:—Held: (1) applying the doctrine of cy-près or approximation, the devises to W. & his male issue & to J. W. & his male issue were not void for remoteness.

(2) J. W. became, on the death of W. without male issue, entitled to an estate for life only, & on the death of J. E. without male issue Y. H. became entitled to an estate for life, & on the death of Y. H. without male issue the property stood limited to the use of W. 599. Limitation of application of doctrine—Only to persons the object of testator's bounty.]

(1) Testator, who died before Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), was passed, by his will gave real estate to his children C., G., & M., without any words of limitation, & declared that they & the survivors of them should stand seised thereof in trust to retain the income thereof for their own benefit in equal shares during their natural lives; but the will contained a proviso that if any of such children should die unmarried, or, being married, without leaving a child, his or her share should accrue to the surviving child or children, equally if more than one, & that the last survivor of the three children should take all the estate devised. The will continued as follows: "But in case such son or daughter so dying shall leave issue at his or her decease . . . the share of such child so dying to go & be divided equally amongst his or her child or children . . . for life, share & share alike if more than one, & if but one then the whole share to such only child for life . . . & so to be continued & distributed in a descending line per stirpes from issue to issue for life so long as any issue shall be living descended from my children, the children of the parent dying taking parent's share equally between them in all cases of decease." The will contained no gift over in case of default of issue. G. died in 1856 a bachelor & intestate. C. died in 1874 leaving one child only, R. M. died in 1890 without issue, but having devised her real estate to R., who executed a disentailing deed. It was admitted that only half of the property passed to M. as the survivor of the three children:—Held: neither C. nor R. took an estate tail in the other moiety according to the cy-près doctrine, but on the death of R. there was an intestacy, & this moiety belonged to testator's heir.

(2) If you find successive limitations for life to persons who stand in such relation to each other as that they would take successively under an estate tail, if the limitations were construed as creating an estate tail, but who cannot take in the literal terms of the gift by reason of the limitations as they stand being void, then it may be possible under certain circumstances to apply the doctrine of cy pres, & to say that instead of the estate purported to be given by the will an estate tail has been created (BUCKLEY, J.).

(2) But directly you find that the persons to benefit are a class larger than those who would take under an estate tail . . . then the matter is a totally different one. In the present case the point of the whole matter as it seems to me lies in this—that as you pass from generation to generation the children of the parent dying are to take their parent's share equally between them. As you come to each generation it is not the heir in tail who is to take, but the heir in tail & all his brothers & sisters are to take equally between them. That is a direction hopelessly inconsistent with an estate tail, & the creation by implication of an estate tail will not give effect to that intention at all (BUCKLEY, J.).—Re RICHARDSON, PARRY v. HOLMES, [1904] 1 Ch. 332; 73 L. J. Ch. 153; 91 L. T. 169; 52 W. R. 119; 48 Sol. Jo. 33. Annotation:—As to (1) Fidd. Re Mortimer, Gray v. Gray (1905), 92 L. T. 452.

SECT. 2.—STATUTORY RESTRICTIONS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), ss. 164–166.

611. Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98) — Not a penal statute.]—A contingent liability under a covenant executed but not broken by testator is a debt within the meaning of the provision for payment of debts, excepted from the operation of above Act.

Testator bequeathed shares in a newspaper to his wife, with a proviso that if they should be sold, the purchase-money should be placed in the funds, & that she should have the interest for her life;

but should she not sell the shares, then whatsoever sum might annually accrue from them above £200 was to be reserved as a kind of sinking fund for the protection of the shares:—Held: a large fund which had arisen from the income beyond £200 a year, & which was not required for the protection of the shares, formed capital, & the widow was entitled only to a life interest therein.

There was a good deal of discussion at the Bar, whether this statute should or should not be strictly construed. It certainly is not a penal statute. . . . We have only to strive to discover the intention of the legislature in passing the Act looking at the supposed mischief which was to be remedied, & the extent of the remedy meant to be applied. The whole statute must be taken together & construed as if, consisting of one clause, it had begun "unless for payment of debts of any grantor, etc., no person or persons shall," etc. . . . But debts afterwards to accrue, for which the grantor, settlor, or devisor is liable, are surely the debts of the grantor, settlor or devisor, & a bonâ fide provision for payment of such debts could not interfere with the policy of the legislature in guarding against accumulations dangerous to the commonwealth (LORD CAMPBELL, C.).—VARLO v. FADEN (1859), 1 De G. 615. — — — — — Consideration of probable as well as actual events.]—The four different periods beyond which the accumulation of income is unlawful under above Act, sect. 1, are alternative & not cumulative; therefore, when one period has been applied & exhausted, a second period cannot be resorted to & applied, in order to extend the time for accumulation. In applying above Act the ct. is bound to consider not merely the events which have happened, but also those which might have happened. By a post-nuptial settlement the husband assigned all his personal estate to trustees upon trust to apply the income to his own maintenance, & subject thereto, during the joint lives of himself & his wife, & the life of the survivor of them, to apply all or any part of the income for the maintenance of the wife & the children of the marriage, & to accumulate the surplus, if any, so that the accumulations should be added to the principal fund & follow the destination thereof, with liberty for the trustees to resort to the accumulations of any preceding years & apply the same for the maintenance of the wife & children; & after the death of the survivor of the settlor & his wife upon trust, as to both capital & income, for such of their issue as the settlor & his wife by deed jointly, or the survivor by will, should appoint, & in default for the children of the marriage as tenants in common, sons at twenty-one, & daughters at twenty-one or marriage:—Held: the only one of the said four periods of above Act applicable to the case was the first, viz., the life of the settlor; & the trust for accumulation contained in the settlement was void as from the death of the husband.

It is clear that this part of the Act [re the minorities of persons living or en ventre sa mère at the time of the grantor's death] refers only to a direction to accumulate when such accumulation is to begin from the date of the grantor's death (KAY, J.).—JAGGER v. JAGGER (1883), 25 Ch. She gave the income of the residue to H., at whose death the whole was to be equally divided between the grandchildren of the father of testatrix. Testatrix died in 1825. If testator directs his property to go in such a course, that upon certain contingencies there must be an accumulation beyond twenty-one years, he does direct that upon those contingencies the accumulation shall take place beyond that time (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).

(2) When the property comes to an infant, as the infant has no will to say whether it shall be spent or accumulated, the ct. expresses its will for the infant & says that the most advantageous way of applying the rents is to accumulate them for him, that is for the benefit of the person who is in possession. By a codicil he directed that two bond debts, & all other debts which should be due from S., one of the residuary legatees, should not be payable unless & until his share of the residue should become vested & that the amount of the debts & interest should then be deducted from his share. Shortly after the date of this codicil, S. gave testator a bond for £8,000, conditioned to be void if S. should pay £4,000, with lawful interest, within three months after his taking an absolute interest in a moiety of the residue, his interest being contingent during the life of testator's son. S. lived to acquire an absolute vested interest:—Held. (1) there was an express direction to accumulate & the accumulations beyond the period of twenty-one years from testator's death were void, & belonged to testator's next of kin; (2) the accumulations were not within the exceptions in the Thellusson Act respecting portions for children or provision for debts.

By a codicil she revoked all gifts to or in favour of E. & S. respectively. By a second codicil, after reciting that she had purchased certain realty since the date of her will, which, in fact, was bought before the date of the first codicil, she devised the same upon the trusts declared in her said will in respect of her residue :—Held : (1) the first codicil was not revoked, & the property devised by the second codicil was subject to the trusts of the residue as declared by the will & first codicil taken together ; (2) the gift to the children of E. was accelerated, but until she should have a child the income of the £1,000 fell into residue, & the income of two-tenths of the residue as to personality belonged to the next of kin, & as to realty to the heir of testatrix.—*GREEN v. 624. ————.] — Testator, who died in June, 1837, gave to trustees the whole of his property in trust for the payment of his debts, with full pow. to sell all or any part of his estates or to demise the same ; & directed them out of the moneys produced or out of the rents to pay the testamentary expenses & debts, & then gave certain legacies, & directed that after the death of his wife & after the payment of all debts & legacies the whole residue of all his remaining property should be divided into twelve portions, & be given "to the children" of his late aunts "equally among them, the descendants, if any, of those who might have died being entitled to the benefit which their deceased parent would have received had he or she been then alive . . . & should there be no children or lawful descendants of any of his aunts remaining at the time the bequests should become payable, then the portions" were to fall into the residuary fund. Testator declared that it should not be incumbent on his exors. to pay the legacies sooner than two years after his decease ; nor to divide the residue amongst his relatives until two years after the death of his wife, & made provision for payment of his wife's jointure. The wife died in 1876.

It was not the intention of testator that the wife during her life should be entitled to the whole income of the residuary estate. It follows that the whole income goes along with the capital of the fund, subject only to this that the accumulation must stop, under the provisions of the Thellusson Act [Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98)] at the end of twenty-one years from testator's death, & from that time the income must be separated, & it must be ascertained how much arose from the realty, & how much from personality, & each of those funds will belong & be payable accordingly to the persons whom I may describe as the real & personal representatives of testator, or those who claim through them respectively (HALL, V.-C.).—*RALPH v. The trustees were then directed to stand possessed of the balance thereof upon the trusts therein-after declared ; & testator directed that, if any of his children should die in his lifetime or afterwards, without having acquired a vested interest in the income or trust moneys, leaving any child or children, then & in such case such last-mentioned child or children should be entitled to the same share of the income as his, her, or their deceased parent would have been entitled to, if living ; & from & after the determination of the estates & interests in the trust property thereinbefore limited & given, upon trust to divide the same between & amongst the whole of testator's grandchildren in equal shares per capita, as & when they, being respectively a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, for their own use & benefit absolutely.

Upon the questions as to what would be the period of distribution of the capital, & amongst whom, such capital would be divisible :—Held : no distribution could take place until the death of the last surviving annuitant, & all testator's grandchildren then existing would be entitled to share equally.—*Re HISCOR, HISCOR v. #### SUB-SECT. 3.—APPLICATION OF RESTRICTIONS.

A. In General.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), ss. 164–166.

627. Partial accumulations—Two-thirds of produce of estate.—Testator devised his freehold & copyhold estates, charged with annuities for his sons & daughter, upon trust, to invest & accumulate the surplus produce thereof for the benefit of his grandchildren then born, or thereafter to be born, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, when the accumulations were to be equally divided among such of his grandchildren as should then be living ; & he directed that, in case any of his sons & daughter should be living after the youngest of his grandchildren should have attained twenty-one, the residue of the rent & profits should be further accumulated, & that such last-mentioned accumulation should be equally divided among all his grandchildren who should be living at the death of the survivor of his sons & daughter ; & charged as aforesaid, he directed that, immediately after the decease of such survivor, the whole of his estates should stand charged for twenty years with the payment of two-third parts of the clear produce of his estates, in equal shares & proportions of so much money as would, in fifteen years, make in the whole £30,000 which sum, with the interest & produce thereof, he directed should be divided equally among all his grandchildren who should live to attain the age of twenty-one, their exors. or administrators. Testator died in the year 1812, leaving ten grandchildren, of whom nine were the children of one of the annuitants, & the tenth was the child of a son of testator, who died before the will was made; no grandchildren were born afterwards, but those who survived testator lived to attain twenty-one, the eldest having come of age before the execution of the will, & the youngest, in the year 1830; the last survivor of the testator's children died in the year 1831:—Held: the limitation creating a charge of two-thirds of the produce of the estates for twenty years, was a provision for accumulation within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98); it was necessarily to be connected with the two prior trusts for accumulation, which determined in the year 1831; & it was therefore effectual for two years only, & was void for the remaining eighteen, being the period by which, when super-added to the duration of the preceding trusts, it exceeded the limits within which accumulation was allowed.—SHAW v. RHODES (1835), 1 My. & Cr. 135; 40 E. R. 328; affd. sub nom. EVANS v. HELMER (1837), 5 Cl. & Fin. 114, H. L.

628. Immediate application of property to appointed purpose impossible.]—Testator, after devising his estates in strict settlement, directed that, in case he should not erect a mansion house on his estates in his lifetime, his trustees should, forthwith after his death, erect the same according to such plan as he should approve of in his lifetime; or, if he should die before such plan should be prepared & completed, then according to such plan as his trustees, with the consent of the person, for the time being beneficially entitled to the immediate freehold of his estates, should think proper to adopt; & he gave £20,000 to the trustees, to be applied in erecting the house, & in the meantime, to be laid out in the funds & the dividends to be accumulated, & the accumulations as well as the original fund to be applied in erecting the house, & the surplus, if any, to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the devised estates. Owing to opposition on the part of the tenant for life, the trustees did not build the house until more than twenty-one years after testator's death; & they invested the £20,000 & accumulated the income of it during the whole of the interval:—Held: the direction for accumulation was not within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), but the whole of the accumulated fund was applicable to purposes directed by the will.—*LOMBE v. 629. Accumulation by operation of law—Maintenance of infant.]—By operation of law, an accumulation for more than twenty-one years may legally take place.

Testatrix, who died in 1819, bequeathed a legacy to accumulate in trust for the eldest daughter of A., to be paid at twenty-one, & if none, to the eldest daughter of C., payable in like manner. A. never had a daughter, & died in 1851. C. had a daughter G. born in 1821, & who died in 1827, & other daughters:—Held: the representative of G. was entitled to the legacy & to the accumulations accrued down to 1827, together with simple interest thereon from that time to the day of payment in 1852.

A great distinction exists between the incidents affecting such an accumulation, made by operation of law, & one made under a direction, if valid, contained in the will. In the former case it is the property of the infant, & might, if necessary, be applied for his maintenance or advancement; but, in the latter case, it could not be touched until he attained the age of twenty-one years (ROMILLY, M.R.).—*BRYAN v. 633. Accumulations to be invested abroad—Testator domiciled in England.—Testator gave the income of all his property to his mother for life, & after her death he gave an annuity of £100 to each of his two sisters, the longer liver to have £200. After the decease of his two sisters, he gave two legacies of £500 each. Testator then left the whole of his property, real & personal, to trustees, to be placed out on such securities as they should think most advisable, for the benefit of his heirs; & after the decease of his mother & two sisters, the amount of the same to be invested in landed property in Scotland, which was to be strictly entailed on his nephew & his heirs lawfully begotten:—Held: the gift for the benefit of the heirs of testator was a gift of the corpus of the property, as it existed at his death for the benefit of all those who were entitled to any of his property real or personal; the directions in the will rendered accumulations of income necessary, which could not be done for more than twenty-one years after the death of testator, by reason of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98); & the direction to invest accumulations on land in Scotland did not prevent the operation of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98).—MACPHERSON v. STEWART (1858), 28 L. J. Ch. 177; 32 L. T. O. S. 143; 7 W. R. 34.

634. — Testator domiciled abroad.—Testator being at the time of his death domiciled in Jersey, & having a large personal estate in England, by his will gave all his personal estate to his trustees, upon a trust for accumulation, which would according to Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), be wholly invalid, in case of an English will, & upon trust, to invest the fund thereby produced in purchase of real estate in Scotland or in any other country that A. might choose, & settle the same according to the law of entail in Scotland or other the country wherein the estate should be purchased, or as near thereto as the law of that country would admit, upon A. & his issue in tail, with remainders in tail. In a suit to administer the English assets, it appearing that by the law of Jersey entails of land in Jersey were not permitted, but it not appearing that there was any law in Jersey restricting the time for which accumulations might be directed:—Held: the will was valid according to the law of Jersey, & the trustees were bound to carry out the trust declared thereby.—HALDANE v. ECKFORD (1871), 24 L. T. 934.

635. Accumulation in respect of property in England—Testator domiciled abroad—Leaseholds.—The validity of a testamentary disposition of an English leasehold is governed by the law of England, & not by the law of testator's domicile. Where, therefore, testator domiciled in Ireland by his will gave an English leasehold to trustees upon trusts for sale & investment, & directed the investment to be held upon such trusts as were thereby declared concerning his general personal estate, & the trusts declared of the general personal estate included trusts for accumulation extending beyond any of the periods allowed by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), which does not apply to Ireland:—Held: although the validity of the trusts of the general personal estate was not questioned, still Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), applied to the English leasehold & the proceeds of the sale thereof, & the trust for accumulation of the investments of the proceeds of sale in excess of the periods permitted by that Act was invalid.—FREKE v. CARBERY (LORD) (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 461; 21 W. R. 835.

636. — — — — ——24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1, provides that every will made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever may be his domicile, shall as regards personal estate be held to be well executed for the purpose of being admitted in England & Ireland to probate if made according to the forms required by the law of the place where the same was made:—Held: personal estate includes leaseholds, & when the will of a British subject made abroad in the form required by the law of the place has been proved in England, the beneficial interest in the leaseholds passes to the person pointed out in the will as the donee of that interest, provided the bequest does not infringe the law of England, e.g., that relating to accumulations or perpetuity.

It is clear on the authority of Freke v. Carbery (Lord), No. 635, ante, that provisions in a will infringing Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), or the English Law against perpetuities would not be validated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1 (BUCKLEY, J.).—*Re GRASSI, STUBBERFIELD v. 658. What debts within exception—Mortgage debts—Whether in existence or made pursuant to testator's will.—*Pltf.'s father, upon the marriage of his daughters, demises an estate to trustees, upon trusts for raising certain sums, which are settled upon the daughters & their children; & by his will, after charging the estate with other sums to be settled upon the same trusts, with portions for sons, & with a further sum in discharge of a mtge. of another estate, devises it to other trustees, upon trust from time to time to receive the rents & profits, & to invest the same in the purchase of stock, so as to accumulate & form a fund for the payment of the charges; " & after the same should have been raised & paid, upon trust to pay the net rents, issues, & profits unto or for the benefit of such person of his own name, blood & family, as for the time being should succeed to & be invested with his title & dignity of a baronet, to the end that his estate might be continued in his name, blood, & family, & be enjoyed & go along with his title, so long as the rules of law & equity would permit; but if upon failure of issue male of his body there should not be any person who should be entitled to enjoy his title, upon trust to stand seised of the estate, for the benefit of the person or persons who should be his right heir or heirs at law, & to convey & assure the same accordingly":—Held: the trust for accumulation was good, & pltf., the succeeding baronet, took a vested estate for life.*

The enjoyment, & not the property, is tied up; & the estate vests in the same manner as if testator had created a term for payment of his debts (GRAHAM, B.).—BACON v. PROCTOR (1822), Turn. & R. 31; 37 E. R. 1005.

With regard to the term & the trust for accumulation, it may be observed: that the debts, for the payment of which the accumulation is directed, are mtges. either existing at testator's death or made pursuant to his will; charges on the estate of an amount ascertained or to be ascertained in the execution of valid trusts (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—BATEMAN v. HOTCHKIN (1847), 10 Beav. 426; 16 L. J. Ch. 514; 10 L. T. O. S. 282; 11 Jur. 809; 50 E. R. 646.

660. — — — — — Debts of stranger.] — (1) By a marriage settlement, dated in 1823, certain family estates at B., of which Lord B. was tenant for life in remainder, were limited to uses for raising

£40,000 as portions for the younger children of Lord B., to be payable & divided among such children as Lord B. should appoint; & in default of appointment, equally to be divided among them; & payable at the decease of Lord B., or during the lifetime of Lord B., with his consent. The Bishop of D., the great-uncle of Lord B., by his will, dated in 1825, reciting the settlement of 1823, bequeathed £15,000 to trustees, upon trust to accumulate the same during the life of Lord B., or for such further period as should make up the space of twenty years from testator's death, in order by means of the accumulated fund to exonerate the family estates of B. from the charge of £40,000; with a proviso that, if before the expiration of the period of accumulation the accumulated fund should be of sufficient amount for answering the purpose aforesaid, then the accumulation should thereupon immediately cease. Testator then gave certain chattels to go as heirlooms with the settled estates, & bequeathed £30,000 for building a mansion house upon the same. Testator died in 1826. In 1847, being twenty-one years after testator's death, the accumulated fund amounted only to £35,000, but at the time of the institution of the suit it amounted to £43,000:—Held: as Lord B. took an interest under the will, the directions for accumulation were within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 38), s. 2, & valid for the whole period of Lord B.'s life.

(2) To bring a case within the exception of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2, it is not necessary that the parent should take an interest in the estate or fund out of which the accumulations are directed; but it is sufficient that he take an interest generally under the instrument directing the accumulations.

(3) Seemle: the exception in Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2, as to accumulation for payment of debts, is to be construed as extending to the payment of the debts of a stranger, as well as to the debts of the grantor, settlor, or deviser directing the accumulation.

The Legislature then meant that a man should, within the limit allowed by law, be able to provide not only for his own debts, but for the debts of such other person as he should think fit (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).

(4) It is clear also that the provision as to debts must relate to past debts; & nobody can deny that a man being able by his will under this Act [Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98)] to provide for his debts generally, this will include his future debts (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).

(5) But . . . it was said that the words, "such conveyance, settlement, or devise," make it necessary that the gift to the person who is to take an interest under the conveyance, settlement, or devise, must be by the very clause which creates the portion. With that construction I cannot, however, agree. . . . There is no magic in the word "devise"; it means a disposition by will, & in the sentence "under such conveyance, settlement, or devise" stands as representing the instrument in which it is contained (LORD ST. LEONARDS, C.).—BARRINGTON v. LIDDELL (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 480; 22 L. J. Ch. 1; 20 L. T. O. S. 133; 17 Jur. 241; 1 W. R. 41; 42 E. R. 958, L. C.

The residue was given to A. A. had one child living at the date of the will & at the death of testatrix, which died under twenty-one. A. filed a claim for the payment to him of the dividends on the sum, & the accumulation of such dividends beyond twenty-one years from the death of testatrix:—Held: the sum of money bequeathed was not a portion within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98); & a portion means a sum of money secured to a child out of property, the income of which is given to its parent; & a gift to a parent of a residue does not make a previous gift to his child out of the general personal estate a portion within the meaning of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98).

Portions for children are sums of money secured to them out of property, out of the income of which a provision is made for the parents; & although gifts have been held protected, as being portions within the meaning of this exception, in some cases, where the parents took no interest in the subject-matter of the gift, still this will only be where there is some settlement on the parent, & where the nature of the gift or of the context shows that the gift ought to be so held to be within the exception (TURNER, V.-C.).—*JONES v. She directed that the "portion" of £50,000 for one of such sons should be paid to trustees, to invest the same during his life & to dispose of a competent part of the income in his maintenance, & from time to time to invest the surplus income, to the intent that the same might accumulate for the benefit of the persons who, under her will, should be entitled thereto; & upon trust, after the decease of her said son, to dispose of a competent part of the £50,000, & accumulations in the maintenance of the son's children during their minorities, or until their portions should become payable under the will, & to divide the £50,000 & accumulations among the children of the son at twenty-one or marriage; & if the son should die without leaving issue, testatrix directed the £50,000 with the accumulations to sink into the residue given for the benefit of another of her four sons:—Held: the trust for accumulations was within the exception in Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), as being of a "portion," & was a valid trust.—*MIDDLETON v. The money had been invested, & the dividends invested & accumulated for a period of considerably over twenty-one years:—Held: the gift was not a gift to raise portions under Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2, & therefore, that the parties entitled under it were only entitled to the accumulation for twenty-one years from the death of testator.

Whatever meaning the term "portions" may be capable of bearing, I am of opinion that the gift of a legacy to a parent for life, & after her death to her children, is not a provision for "raising portions for children"—the words used in the second sect.—within the meaning of that sect.—*WATT v. By a codicil he directed, in an event which happened, that the gift to the granddaughter was to be revoked, the income to be accumulated, & the accumulations to be "considered as part of the original fund from which the same arose, & thenceforth to be added thereto:—Held: though more than twenty-one years had elapsed, that the case did not fall within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), & all the children of the granddaughter were entitled during her life to have the accumulations of income added to the corpus.—ST. PAUL v. HEATH (1865), 13 L. T. 271; 11 Jur. N. S. 903.

679. —.]—Testator, who died in Mar. 1888, directed that his trustees should out of the income of his residuary estate set apart a yearly sum of £24, "while & so long as there shall be a child of my daughter S., the wife of H., for the time being under the age of twenty-one years, subject as hereinafter mentioned," invest the same & accumulate the income thereof, & should hold the aggregated & accumulated fund in trust for such of the children of his daughter S. as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should marry, in equal shares, the shares to be vested interests & to be paid & payable in the case of a son at twenty-one, & in the case of a daughter at twenty-one or marriage. Subject as aforesaid, testator directed the trustees to pay the income of his residuary estate to S. for life; but he directed that if S. should survive H. the trustees should during the rest of her life pay her the whole income of his residuary estate, & should no longer set apart the annual sums, without prejudice to the sums already set apart & invested & the income thereof.

S. & H. survived testator & had five children, three of whom were born in testator's lifetime, & two after his death. The eldest child was born in 1882, & attained twenty-one in 1903, & the youngest was born in 1896, & would not attain twenty-one until 1917:—Held: (1) the period prescribed for aggregation & accumulation, subject to earlier cesser by the death of H. in the lifetime of S., & to later cesser by the birth of other children, was, so long as there was a child of S. under twenty-one, whether it was born before or after its eldest brother or sister attained twenty-one, namely, until 1917; (2) the accumulated fund was a "portion" within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2, & the direction to accumulate was valid.

It [the period] is protected if it is a provision for raising portions for children of any person taking an interest under the will. . . . Now the meaning of the word portion as generally understood, is a sum of money secured to a child out of property either coming from or settled upon its parents. The benefit is none the less a portion because it is given to all the children including the eldest child & not to younger children only (BUCKLEY, J.).

(3) The class of children to take was not closed when the eldest child attained twenty-one, but only at the end of the period for accumulation, & the accumulated fund was not until then divisible.—Re STEPHENS, KILBY v. BETTS, [1904] 1 Ch. 322; 73 L. J. Ch. 3; 91 L. T. 167; 52 W. R. 89; 48 Sol. Jo. 15.

The widow died in 1917:—Held: the trust for accumulation after the widow's death was not a "provision for raising a portion" within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2, & was invalid.—Re ELLIOTT, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. #### C. Addition of Income to Capital to Provide Aggregate Fund.

681. Whether treated as portion.—Testator gave certain annuities out of his residuary estate to his three children, " & requested the surplus of the annual income to be applied in accumulation of the capital of his property for the benefit of his grandchildren " & which was to be divided between them after the death of the survivor of testator's three children. Thirty years elapsed between the death of testator & of the survivor of his children:—Held: (1) the direction for accumulation, beyond twenty-one years from testator's death was void under Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 1, & the case did not come with the exceptions of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2.

As two of the grandchildren for whose benefit the accumulation is directed were not the children of any person taking an interest under the will, & as the accumulation which is directed does not appear to me to be a provision for raising portions, but a provision for making addition to the capital for the purpose of making one gift of an aggregate fund, I think this case is not within the proviso of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98) (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).

(2) The void accumulations did not belong to the residuary legatees, but they were undisposed of.—Eyre v. MARSDEN (1838), 2 Keen, 564; 7 L. J. Ch. 220; 2 Jur. 583; 48 E. R. 744; affd. (1839), 4 My. & Cr. 231, L. C.

Where, subject to such a direction, the estate itself is devised to several in succession, the direction to accumulate operates as a charge on the successive estates; & accumulations made after twenty-one years from testator's death belong not to his heir-at-law, but from time to time to the several persons entitled to the rents & profits.

In the events which have happened the direction [to accumulate] in question, like that in *Eyre v. 689. ———.] — Testator, who died in 1858, by his will, dated in that year, gave life annuities to his wife & two brothers, & directed that the income of his residuary personal estate, & the rents & profits of certain freehold & leasehold properties, should be accumulated during the life of his wife & brothers & the survivor; & after the decease of the survivor he bequeathed his residuary personal estate & the accumulation of the income thereof, & of the rents & profits of the freeholds & leaseholds, to his nephews & nieces, children of his two brothers, "the same to be paid to them on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years." Testator gave the freeholds & leaseholds to other persons. The wife & brothers survived testator, & lived for more than twenty-one years after his death. The questions were, whether the direction to accumulate was invalid as being contrary to Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), or whether it came within the exception contained in Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), s. 2. For the nephews & nieces it was argued that, although, according to the authorities, the gift of the capital of the residuary personal estate together with the accumulations thereof, was not a "provision for raising, portions" within the exception to Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), yet the gift of the accumulations of the rents & profits of the freeholds & leaseholds, not being accompanied by a gift of the freeholds & leaseholds themselves, was such a provision; & therefore, as to such rents & profits, the direction for accumulations was effectual:—Held: the rents & profits could not be severed from the aggregate fund, as a part of which they were given; & the direction for accumulating them was not a "provision for raising portions" within the exception, & was ineffectual beyond the twenty-one years allowed by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98).—*Re WALKER, WALKER v. 691. Accumulation to maintain in repair.]—Testator directed his trustees to invest his residuary moneys, together with all accumulations, in the purchase of landed estate, & that out of the income thereof an annuity should be paid to his nephew for life, & that the surplus income should from time to time during the life of the nephew be expended in the purchase of additional land, "or in the improvement of the landed estate, & in maintaining in good habitable repair houses & tenements on the property;" & that, on the death of the nephew, his son (if any) should have a life interest in the whole of the landed property, subject to one-third of the yearly rental being expended year by year in improving, keeping up, or extending the estate; with remainder to the male heir of his nephew in succession for ever. Testator died in 1865. His nephew survived him & had a son, an infant. Shortly after testator's death an action was commenced for the administration of his estate, & a receiver was appointed. Subsequently the trustees purchased out of money in ct., representing testator's residuary estate, a freehold estate, which was conveyed to them upon the trusts of the will. Under an order made in the action the income of testator's estate, after keeping down the annuity to the nephew & providing for repairs, was, during twenty-one years from testator's death, invested & accumulated. Upon the expiration of the twenty-one years a further order was made directing the receiver, after keeping down the annuity & maintaining in good habitable repair the houses & tenements on the property," to divide the residue of the income, as from the expiration of the twenty-one years, among testator's next of kin; whereupon the receiver applied part of the income of the landed estate, after keeping down the nephew's annuity, in repairs & "improvements" on the estate. The question was then raised, on a summons by the next of kin, whether the trust or direction in the will to expend surplus income in improvements was not, though indirectly, a trust or direction for "accumulation," & therefore void, under Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), after the expiration of twenty-one years from testator's death; & thus whether the expenditure by the receiver for such purposes was valid:—Held: all improvements in substance, which could in any fair sense be regarded as coming under the words "maintaining in good habitable repair houses & tenements on the property," were outside Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), altogether; money laid out in building houses on the land would be within the Act.—*VINE v. Accumulation to keep up property to present value.]—A direction in a will to apply a yearly sum out of the rents of leaseholds, held for a term of more than twenty-one years, from testator's death, in effecting & keeping on foot a policy of insurance to secure the replacement at the end of the term of the capital that would be lost through not selling the leaseholds, is not a direction to accumulate & does not fall within Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98).

SLADEN* (1830), as reported in Taml. 407; 48 E. R. 102.

709. —.]—Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees in trust for his daughter, & after her decease for all & every the child or children of his daughter, share & share alike, when they should respectively attain twenty-one, with maintenance in the meantime; & in case any of said children should die under twenty-one, & have one or more child or children who should survive testator's daughter, & live to attain twenty-one, such child or children to be entitled to his or their parent's share: provided also, that in case any child or children of his daughter should die before attaining twenty-one the share or shares of such child or children should go to the survivor or survivors, & the issue of any deceased child or children who should marry & die under twenty-one, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, the issue of any deceased child or children to stand in the place of the parent or parents; with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or there being any such, no one of them should live to attain twenty-one, nor leave any issue who should live to attain that age:—Held: the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive testator's daughter, & not live to attain twenty-one, & was, therefore, not too remote.

The daughter having lived for twenty-six years after the death of testator, I am of opinion that the accumulations of the dividends & interest exceeding the annual sum of £200 were good for twenty-one years, & the daughter during the rest of her life was entitled only to the interest of the accumulated fund, which, after her death, passed by the limitation. The accumulation having ceased at the end of twenty-one years, from that time, during her life, the daughter was entitled to the whole sum beyond the £200, being the person who would have been entitled if such accumulation had not been directed (LEACH, M.R.).—*TRICKEY v. 715. —.]—(1) Testator by his will devised real estates charged with life annuities to trustees, upon trust, after the decease of the surviving annuitant, for sale; & he directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary personal estate, & of the money to arise from the sale of his real estates, & of the rents of his said estates until the same should be sold, & all accumulations thereof, & also the rents of the estates after the same should become saleable, upon certain trusts therein mentioned. Testator then declared that in the meantime & until his real estates should be sold, the trustees should, after payment of the annuities, invest & accumulate the rents, etc., in the way of compound interest, & when & so soon as the estates should be sold or become saleable, should stand possessed of said rents, etc., & the accumulations thereof upon the several trusts, etc., therein-before declared concerning same & concerning the money arising from the sale of said estates respectively. One of the annuitants having survived the period, twenty-one years from the death of testator, beyond which the trust for accumulation was invalidated by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98):—Held: the gift of the rents until sale & all accumulations thereof was, upon the true construction of the will, tantamount only to a gift of the fund to arise from the accumulation directed to be made, & could not be held to embrace rents set free, by the operation of the statute, from the trust for accumulation; & so far as the trust to accumulate was void, the gift itself became inoperative; & the rents arising between the period when the accumulation was made to cease by the operation of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), & the period when the same was directed by the will to cease were undisposed of & belonged to the heir-at-law.

(2) The ct. is not at liberty to apply the Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), in such a manner as to accelerate the enjoyment of any gift or disposition contained in a will.

immediate payment to the sons, but as to the daughter's share, that it should not be paid to her, but should be retained by his trustees & allowed to accumulate during the life of her husband; that upon his death it should be secured for her & her children; that if there should be no child it should be paid to her; & that if she should die before it became payable it should go to the two sons. The accumulations were duly made during twenty-one years from testator's death, at the expiration of which period the daughter & her husband were both living. On bill filed by the trustees for the direction of the ct.:—Held: the accumulations could not continue after the twenty-one years had expired, but the original gift in the daughter's favour was valid, & she was entitled to the income of the original fund & the accumulations from the cessation of the accumulations during the joint lives of herself & her husband.

The general rule may well be taken to be this: if there is an absolute gift, & then a series of limitations modifying that gift, so far as the limitations do not extend, the absolute gift remains (TURNER, L.J.).—*COMBE v. 724. —.]—Testator, who died in 1852, gave freehold & leasehold estates to trustees upon trust for his wife for life or second marriage, & in case she should marry again, then from & after that event, during the remainder of her life, in trust to receive the rents & to hold the same during her life upon the trusts thereafter mentioned, & after her death to the use of G. absolutely. He then gave his personal estate to the same trustees, & directed them to pay the income to his wife during her widowhood, but if she should marry again, then from & after such marriage all these bequests in her favour were to cease, & in lieu thereof they were to pay her, out of the rents & income, an annuity of £500, & during her life, to invest the surplus, if any; & after her decease such trust moneys, surplus rents, funds, & accumulations of income were to be disposed of by the trustees in paying certain legacies; & the residue he gave to T. absolutely.

The widow married again in 1854. Her annuity had been paid, as well as the rents & legacies, & since her marriage the residue of the rents & income had been invested & accumulated:—Held: (1) as to the surplus rents & income which would accrue between the expiration of twenty-one years from testator's death & the death of his widow, there was an intestacy; & (2) T. was not entitled during the life of the widow to ask for payment of the accumulated funds, subject to provision being made for payment of the annuity & legacies.

(3) Accumulations which fail under the Thelluson Act [Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98)] must be treated in the same way as a gift which fails under Mortmain Act. It has never been held that property that is set free by the operation of Mortmain Act will accrue for the benefit of the persons entitled in remainder (JAMES, L.J.).

(4) Applt. is not appointed residuary legatee by an independent clause, he is only legatee in remainder of the accumulated fund, & there is a gap between the expiration of the period of twenty-one years & the time when he will become entitled to it (COTTON, L.J.).

(5) The effect of the statute [Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98)] is not to accelerate the enjoyment of any interest under the will (THESSIGER, L.J.).—WEATHERALL v. THORNBURGH (1878), 8 Ch. D. 261; 47 L. J. Ch. 658; 39 L. T. 9; 26 W. R. 593, C. A.

One of the annuitants who was entitled to the dividends of £500 Consols having died, F. claimed immediate payment of the capital of £500 Consols to him:—Held: F. was not entitled under the special bequest to him to any income which might accrue in the interval between the expiration of twenty-one years from testator's death, & the death of the surviving annuitant, but such income belonged to the residuary legatees; F. was therefore not entitled to the immediate payment of the whole £500 Consols, but being one of the residuary legatees, he was entitled to payment of one-fifth thereof.—*Re PARRY, POWELL v. Testator bequeathed a second sum of £10,000, on similar trusts in favour of his daughter B. & her children, with similar trusts in default of children; & gave his residuary estate upon trusts under which each of his daughters C. & D. took a life interest with a general testamentary power of appointment, with a trust in default of appointment for her statutory next of kin.

At the expiration of the period of twenty-one years the trustees had made certain accumulations of the unapplied income of each legacy of £10,000, & since that date the surplus income of the two legacies & of the past accumulations had also been accumulated by the trustees. All four daughters were still living. On a summons taken out for the purpose of ascertaining how such surpluses ought to be dealt with:—Held: (1) according to the true construction of the will, the surplus income of the legacies after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, was not given to the tenants for life of the residuary estate as income, but was to be added to the capital of the residuary estate & dealt with accordingly.

(2) On this construction of the will the addition of the surplus income to the capital was in effect an accumulation within the provisions of Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), & the will must be read as if this direction were eliminated.

(3) On this footing the surplus income of the original legacies after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, & also the income of the accumulations made during the term of twenty-one years, were not undisposed of, but were properly payable to the tenants for life of the residuary estate.—*Re HAWKINS, WHITE v. devised on trust for sale exceeded twenty-one years from testator's death. The accumulations & surplus income being otherwise undisposed of were caught by a general residuary bequest with a trust to invest for a life tenant & remaindermen:—Held: the valid accumulations during the twenty-one years from testator's death fell into the residue as capital, but the accumulations after that date were invalid & went to the life tenant as income.—Re GARSIDE, WRAGG v. GARSIDE, [1919] 1 Ch. 132; 88 L. J. Ch. 116; 120 L. T. 339; 35 T. L. R. 129; 63 Sol. Jo. 156.

Testatrix, who died in Jan. 1904, bequeathed a fund of £25,000 to trustees upon trust out of the income to pay to a niece the annual sum of £500 during her life & to accumulate the surplus income; & from & after the death of the niece testatrix directed her trustees to hold the fund & the accumulations, subject to a discretionary power to apply part of the income of the fund for the benefit of the niece's husband, in trust for all the children of the niece who should, whether living at testatrix's death or born afterwards, attain the age of twenty-one years. The will also contained a residuary gift.

At the end of twenty-one years from testatrix's death, there were six children of the niece, all of whom had long since attained twenty-one years of age; & the niece was sixty five years old:—Held: the ct. ought not, for the purpose of closing the class of the niece's children, to make the presumption that the niece was past child bearing; the existing children could not therefore be treated as the only persons interested so as to be entitled to stop the accumulations; that there was, therefore, an effective direction for accumulations beyond the period sanctioned by Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98), with the result that as from the end of that period the surplus income fell into residue.—*Re DELOITTE, GRIFFITHS v. be allotted to him & his children, & that thenceforth the said portion or share should be held by trustees, upon trust for the person so selecting the same for his life, & after his decease upon trust, as to one equal moiety, for his eldest son, & his heirs, exors., etc., & as to the other moiety for the rest of his children, & their heirs, exors., etc., in equal proportions, & if but one child, both moieties for such child absolutely; but if any or either of his said nephews' sons should die under their respective ages of twenty-five years, or having attained that age should afterwards die without leaving issue, the share or shares intended for the person or persons so dying should go to the others & other of the said nephews' sons; & if all but one should die without leaving issue, the trustees, should stand seised & possessed of the whole trust estate, in trust for such one surviving nephew's son for his life, & for his children & child as aforesaid; but if all the testator's said nephews' sons should depart this life without leaving issue, then upon trust for such person as should at that time be the testator's heir. At the time of the testator's death, A. & B. had several sons living, & B. had another son born afterwards:—Held: upon the construction of the will, the trusts for accumulation & division of the property comprised all the sons of the nephews, who should be living when the first of them should attain twenty-five; & as the son who should first attain that age might not be born until after the testator's death, the gifts were too remote, & therefore void; & the testator's real estates upon his death became vested in the heir.

(2) It was agreed that this obvious construction of the gift is controlled by other parts of the will, & that upon the true construction of the whole together the shares were given to sons living at testator's death, & vested in them before twenty-five, though the payment or enjoyment was intended to be postponed till that age. It cannot be said that any words can be so strong in a will as to preclude the qualification of them by other parts of it; but it would be very hazardous to permit terms, perfectly unambiguous in themselves, to be so qualified by anything short of a very clear exposition of testator's meaning. . . . I am of opinion that there is nothing in the other parts of the will to affect the obvious meaning of the words used in the gift, & that the direction is to divide the property amongst such of the sons of the two nephews as may be living, when the first of such sons shall attain twenty-five; & that such gift is too remote & therefore void (LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—*BOUGHTON v. 754. ———.]—Testator devised estates, on trust to pay the rents to a tenant for life; & after her death, on trust to accumulate the same for twenty-one years from the death of the tenant for life, & at the end of that period, to divide the accumulations among defined classes of objects, & with limitations in remainder after the expiration of the twenty-one years, but no residuary devise:—Held: (1) the time of distribution was not accelerated by the operation of the Accumulations Act, 1800 (c. 98); but (2) the rents accruing between the end of the legal period for accumulation & the time of distribution belonged to the heir-at-law of testator.—NETTLETON v. STEPHENSON (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 366; 18 L. J. Ch. 191; 13 L. T. O. S. 42; 13 Jur. 618; 64 E. R. 518.

756. ———.]—Testator devised a landed estate, & bequeathed all his personalty to a trustee upon trust so to vest his real estate in, & cause his personal estate to be placed under the control of, the Ct. of Ch., as that the ct. might administer same; & then bequeathed several annuities to be paid out of the rents & profits of the realty & the proceeds of the personalty & directed that, subject to the payment of the annuities, the rents, income, & produce of the trust estate should be accumulated at compound interest until the decease of the last surviving annuitant, "or during such portion of such surviving annuitant's life as the rules of law will permit," & on the decease of the last surviving annuitant the whole of the trust estate funds & accumulations to be applied by the ct. in the purchase of freehold land to be conveyed to testator's nephew, G., & his heirs:—Held: (1) of the rents of the realty, & the income of the personalty which would accrue during the interval, if any, which should elapse after the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of testator & the death of the surviving annuitant, there was an intestacy; (2) G. was not entitled, during the life of the surviving annuitant, to ask for payment of the fund to himself, subject to provision being made for the annuities. The ct. refused to make any order at present, except to pay the annuities & continue the accumulations.

If the period of twenty-one years should expire during the life of the surviving annuitant, my opinion is that, as to the rents & profits during that period, there is an intestacy, & that the rents of the real estate belong to the heir-at-law, & the income of the personalty to the next of kin (BACON, V.-C.).—*TALBOT v. 1. Leaseholds.—Devise of all testator's real estates wheresoever situate, lying, & being:—Held: not to include leaseholds as well as freeholds.—WHITAKER v. AMBLER (1758), 1 Eden, 151; 28 E. R. 642.

2. —.—A fine was levied of certain premises by a man & his wife to the use of B, his exors. etc., for nine hundred & ninety-nine years, & at the same time the lessor covenanted that if B., his heirs, or assigns shall by deed express his will & mind to have the freehold & inheritance of the premises, then such fine should enure to such persons, & for such estates as by such deed should be expressed. This lease is a mere chattel, & will pass by a general residuary bequest of personal estate.—WILLIAMS v. LANDAFF (Bf.) (1786), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 254; 29 E. R. 1153.

3. —.—An Englishman resident in Scotland bequeathed his whole means & estate to a trustee to pay certain pecuniary legacies, & all the rest of his means & estate to be divided equally

1. Leaseholds.—The English law relating to personality applies to personality in India held by British subjects & others to whom the English law is applicable. A term of years is therefore personality in India as it is in England.—NICHOLAS v. ASPHAR (1896), L. L. R. 24 Calc. 216.—IND.

among certain of his godchildren. The execution of the will was valid according to the law of Scotland, but invalid according to English law. Testator possessed leasehold property in England:—Held: the English leaseholds passed under the will by virtue of Wills Act, 1861 (c. 114), s. 2.

I think that the English leaseholds pass under the will as being personal estate (NORTH, J.).—Re WATSON, CARLTON v. CARLTON (1887), 35 W. R. 711.

4. —[Wills Act, 1861 (c. 114), s. 1, provides that every will made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever may be his domicile, "shall as regards personal estate be held to be well executed for the purpose of being admitted in England & Ireland to probate" if made according to the forms required by the law of the place where the same was made:—Held: "personal estate" includes leaseholds, & when the will of a British subject made abroad in the form required by the law of the place has been proved in England, the beneficial interest in the leaseholds passes to the person pointed out in the will as the donee of that interest, provided the bequest does not infringe the law of England, e.g. that relating to accumulations or perpetuity.

Leaseholds are immovables, but are nevertheless personal estate although they savour of the realty (BUCKLEY, J.).—Re GRASSI, STUBBSFIELD v. GRASSI, [1905] 1 Ch. 534; 74 L. J. Ch. 341; 92 L. T. 455; 53 W. R. 396; 21 T. L. R. 343; 49 Sol. Jo. 366.

5. Real estate purchased with partnership profits.—Not solely for purpose of trade.]—Co-owners of lands, partly customary freehold & partly leasehold, worked a quarry on part of them, & let the rest to agricultural tenants. Part of the undivided profits were from time to time laid out in purchases of other lands for purposes of the quarry, the lands so purchased being, in most cases, conveyed to trustees on trust for the persons expressly by name who were interested in the undivided profits constituting the purchase-moneys, their heirs & assigns, & being in other cases conveyed to trustees without any express declaration of trust. One of the co-owners, a woman, married, & on her marriage a settlement of her shares & interest in the lands & quarry, plant & machinery, was executed, by which her shares & interest in the customary freeholds were treated as real estate, & her shares & interest in the entire property, both real & personal, were settled on behalf for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder, in default of issue, in trust for her, her heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns. Further purchases of customary freehold land were, after her marriage, made from time to time out of the undivided profits of the quarry, the land so purchased being conveyed to trustees, but without any trusts being declared, except in one instance, that of a purchase made in 1849, in which case trusts were expressed on the instrument of conveyance, & were for the benefit of the co-owners, by name, in undivided shares, their heirs & assigns. In the books of account kept by the manager of the business these purchases were treated as if they had been purchases of stock in trade. These accounts were from time to time submitted to the parties interested, & in particular, to the husband of the married woman. She having died without issue:—Held: her share in the purchases of land so made after her marriage devolved as real estate, & not as personalty, & having been made with savings of income, were not comprised in the settlement, but passed at once on her death to pltf., her heir-at-law & customary heir.—STEWART v. BLAKEWAY (1869), 4 Ch. App. 603, L. JJ.

6. Real estate of partnership—Share of partner.]—H., who was a solr., had for many years previously to his death been engaged in various land speculations jointly with C. The speculations consisted in the buying & selling of plots of land, the laying out of the land for building purposes, & the advancing of money to builders. The lands were generally bought in consideration of chief rents, & then sold to builders at increased chief rents, which were retained by H. & C. The conveyances of the lands bought were taken either to H. & C. jointly or to C. alone. A banking account was kept in the names of H. & C., & statements of account were made out every half-year, but there were no partnership arts. between H. & C. Upon the death of H., there being an intestacy as to certain lands & chief rents which had been acquired by him in the course of his joint speculations with C., the question arose as to whether H.'s share of the property went to his heir-at-law, or to his next of kin, as being partnership property & subject to conversion:—Held: the proper inference to be drawn from the evidence & statements of account was, that the relation which had existed between H. & C. was that of partners, & that they were not co-owners of real estate, but that the property in question constituted partnership assets, therefore the property must be treated for the purpose of devolution as personal estate of H., to which his next of kin were consequently entitled.—Re HULTON, HULTON v. LISTER (1890), 62 L. T. 200; sub nom. Re LISTER, HULTON v. LISTER, 6 T. L. R. 160, C. A.

7. Right of presentment to living.]—This title to present could not pass by these general words, bona et catalla, for they do not extend to a right, or things in action, but to such things only which are commonly known & understood by such words. By grant of goods, chattels real do not pass. For when men speak of goods, household stuff, money, & the like, personal things only are understood. So a man cannot be said to have a chattel but where he is possessed of it, & here this interest is but jus praesentandi (ANDERSON, C.J.).

This interest is a chattel; for if the church became void & before presentment the patron dies his exors. shall have the presentment, for that it was a chattel vested in their testator, etc. (PERIAM, J.).—R. v. CANTERBURY (ARCHBP.), FANE & HUDSON (1588), 4 Leon. 107; Owen, 155; 74 E. R. 761.

9. —.]—An advowson belongs to a prebendary in right of his prebend: the church becomes vacant, & prebendary dies without having presented: the presentation belongs to his personal representative, according to the opinion of six judges out of eight, delivered in the House of Lords.

The presentation is the mode of enjoyment, the profit or rent of the estate, & like the rent or profit, belongs to the owner of the estate at the time; it accrues in the nature of a personal chattel, distinct & severed from the inheritance (PARKE, J.).—MIREHOUSE v. 10. Fossilised boat.—(1) In land demised to a gas co. for ninety-nine years, with a reservation to the lessor of all mines & minerals, & covenants under which the lessees were authorised, under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor & according to plans to be previously approved, to erect a gasholder & other buildings, a prehistoric boat, embedded in the soil six feet below the surface, was discovered by the lessees in the course of excavating for the foundations of the gasworks:—Held: the boat, whether regarded as a mineral, or as part of the soil in which it was embedded when discovered, or as a chattel, did not pass to the lessees by the demise, but was the property of the lessor though he was ignorant of its existence at the time of granting the lease.

(2) Further if it ought to be regarded as a chattel, debts. did not acquire any property in the chattel by mere finding as against pltf., who upon the grounds already stated was the owner of the chattel (CHITTY, J.).

(3) Pltf., then, had a lawful possession, good against all the world, & therefore the property in the boat. In my opinion it makes no difference in these circumstances that pltf. was not aware of the existence of the boat (CHITTY, J.).

(4) For the boat was embedded in the land; a mere trespasser could not have taken possession of it, he could only have come at it by further acts of trespass involving spoil & waste of the inheritance (CHITTY, J.).—ELWES v. 16. Exclusive right to take photographs.—An exclusive right to take photographs is not a form of property known to the law.

The promoters of a dog show purported to assign the sole photographic rights in connection with the show. The assignee purported to assign to plffs. the sole press photographic rights at the show. The promoters of the show did not cause any notice to be placed on the tickets of admission or otherwise forbid the taking of photographs at the show. An independent photographer took photographs of the dogs exhibited & sold certain of them to defts., & defts. published the photographs so bought in an illustrated journal. In an action by plffs. for an injunction to restrain them from continuing to do so:—Held: the action would not lie, inasmuch as the promoters of the dog show had, in law, no exclusive right of photographing anything there, & therefore could not assign that right as property. They could have acquired such a right by contract by making conditions as to admission, but they had not done so, & therefore plffs. had failed to make out any cause of action.—*SPORTS & GENERAL PRESS AGENCY, LTD. v. The trustees sold the advowson & cut the timber much beyond the amount specified, considering, under advice, as the law then stood, that the personality was secondarily liable. There being no residuary clause in the will, upon the death of the last tenant for life, a suit was instituted, wherein it was decided that the personal estate was liable to recoup what had been improperly taken from the real; & a question thereupon arose whether the amount directed to be so paid back was personality or realty, the heir-at-law of testator, & his devisees & legatees, being all dead & represented by devolution of interest:—Held: the proceeds, both of the advowson & of the timber, were personal & not real estate.—*BOWRA v. ## Part II.—Possession.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

27. Meaning of term.]—(1) A mere parol gift of a chattel, unaccompanied by delivery of possession, passes no property therein.

(2) A wife, though living apart from her husband, cannot lawfully dispose by gift, even accompanied by actual delivery of possession, of chattels acquired by her during the coverture; but, in an action by the donee against a wrongdoer, for the conversion of chattels so given, it is not competent to deft. to set up the title of the husband.

(3) A., as exor. of B., seized & sold as the goods of his testator a watch & several articles of dress & jewellery which C., the niece of B.'s deceased housekeeper, claimed to be hers by gift, some of them from her aunt, & some from B. in whose house she had for many years lived with her aunt as a sort of adopted member of the family. The jury having found upon sufficient evidence that the articles in question had in fact been given to C. & were in her "possession" at the time of the conversion:—Held: C. was entitled to recover their value; & it was not competent to A., who was a mere wrongdoer to urge, that, as those articles which came to C. by gift from her aunt, the latter, having a husband living, who, however, made no claim to them, had no authority to dispose of them.

(4) "Possession" is a word of ambiguous meaning. In most instances, it is considered to import the manual custody of the chattel; though a man may also be said to be in possession of an article which he has not at the moment about his person (ERLE, C.J.).—BOURNE v. FOSBROOKS (1865), 18 C. B. N. S. 515; 5 New Rep. 374; 34 L. J. C. P. 164; 11 Jur. N. S. 202; 13 W. R. 497; 144 E. R. 545.

28. —.]—THE TUBANTIA, No. 48, post.

29. — Actual physical possession.]—(1) The owner of household goods which had been seized under a fi. fa. agreed verbally with an auctioneer that in consideration of his paying out the sheriff the auctioneer should hold possession of the goods, sell them by auction & pay over the balance, if any, to the owner. This agreement was reduced into writing & the sheriff was paid out, the man in possession remaining in possession for the auctioneer:—Held: since the written agreement did not constitute the auctioneer's title, & was not intended to & did not come into operation until possession had been actually transferred from the sheriff to the auctioneer, it was not an "assurance" or a "licence to take possession," or in any other respect a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 & 1882.

(2) I must say that I received a very candid answer from the Bar when I put the question, what was the difference in the nature of the possession between the possession by the sheriff & the possession by the man who held the property on the part of C.? It was . . . admitted that there was no difference at all in the character or quality of the possession. Then it comes to this, that the possession of the sheriff . . . in every case must be regarded as open to that question as to whether or not it is a physical possession or a formal possession . . . I understand what possession is (at least, I think so), & I never understood that the possession of the sheriff was other than physical & actual possession . . . I find that there was a man in the house for the purpose of preventing any other person interfering with . . . any of the property. . . . Therefore I should have thought that this possession was just as much a physical & actual possession as it is possible for any one man to have in articles which are distributed all over a house (LORD HALSBURY, C.).—*CHARLESWORTH v. 32. By delivery—Of key.]—Delivery necessary to donations mortis causa; & delivery of receipts for South Sea annuities not sufficient, though strong evidence of the intent.

It never was imagined on that statute [21 Jac. 1, c. 19] that delivery of a mere symbol in name of the thing would be sufficient to take it out of that statute; yet notwithstanding, delivery of the key of bulky goods, where wines, etc., are, has been allowed as delivery of the possession, because it is the way of coming at the possession, or to make use of the thing; & therefore the key is not a symbol, which would not do (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—*WARD v. By the contract immediate possession was to be given; & was given without doubt; though deft. says in his answer, he never took possession: but the keys being in his possession, it must be considered, that he was in possession. debt, the grantor was to be allowed to remain in possession of the goods until default in payment of the debt after demand. Default having been made, the grantee became entitled under the bill to take possession of the goods, & accordingly demanded them from the owner of a house in which the grantor had placed them, & threatened to take them by force. The grantor, however, remained in possession of the goods until she filed a petition for liquidation:—Held: (1) the fact that the grantee was entitled to & demanded possession did not take the goods out of the grantor's possession within Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (c. 36), & the trustee in liquidation was entitled to the goods as against the grantee; (2) if the grantor had bailed the goods with a bailee to hold on account of the grantor, the goods would still have been in the possession of the grantor within Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (c. 36), & would not have been taken out of the grantor's possession by the fact that the grantee was entitled to & demanded possession.

(3) The delivery of a key is an ordinary symbol used to notify a change in the possession of the premises to which the key gives the means of entrance. The possession of premises cannot be changed solely by the delivery of a key, but where the delivery of a key is accompanied by an act which may amount to a change in the possession of the premises, the delivery of the key is strong evidence that it was the intention of the parties that the possession of the premises to which the key gives the means of entrance should be changed (MELLISH, L.J.).—*ANCONA v. The general principle seems to me to be that where a person has possession of house or land, with a manifest intention to exercise control over it & the things which may be upon or in it, then, if something is found on that land, whether by an employee of the owner or by a stranger, the presumption is that the possession of that thing is in the owner of the locus in quo (LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.).—SOUTH STAFFORD-

39. —.]—A railway co. by a "ledger agreement," opened a credit account with a coal merchant for the carriage of his coal, the co. to have a continued lien upon the coal conveyed on their lines or being at any time on ground rented of the co. for all charges due to them, & to be at liberty to sell & dispose of any of the coal to satisfy the lien, with the right to close the account by giving one day's notice. By separate agreements the co. let to the merchant allotments within the railway yard for the purpose only of stacking & dealing with the coal. The co. had the keys of the yard gates & kept them locked at certain times. The payments being in arrear, the company closed the account, locked the gates, & detained the coal:—Held: the inference of fact from the circumstances was that both parties intended the co.'s right of detainer to be preserved & if necessary enforced against the coal while in the railway yard; the ledger agreement conferred no licence to take possession of personal chattels or charge or equity thereon & was not a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Acts; & the trustee in the merchant's bkpcy. had no claim against the co. in respect of the detainer.

I think the railway co. were in possession of this coal. The whole object of the arrangement made between them & L. was that they should retain a lien & a physical control, secured by retaining the coal within their yard, of which they could lock the gates if L. was in arrear. . . . True, there was a demise to L. of an allotment in the yard whereon this coal was stacked. That entitled him to occupy the allotment. But did that occupation confer upon him the exclusive possession of everything he placed on the allotment? I cannot see why it should. An officer may be in possession of goods whether debtor has a lease or even the freehold of the house in which the goods are placed. I cannot perceive any necessary dependency between the occupation of a piece of land & the exclusive possession of chattels which lie on it. Nor, in my opinion, can it signify for this purpose whether the occupation of the land is under a demise or merely by licence (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—GREAT EASTERN RY. CO. v. LORD'S TRUSTEE, [1909] A. 42. — Against wrongdoer.—I am of opinion that the law is that a person possessed of goods as his property has a good title as against every stranger, & that one who takes them from him, having no title in himself, is a wrongdoer, & cannot defend himself by showing that there was title in some third person; for against a wrongdoer possession is a title. . . . 45. — ———.—In an action against a stranger for loss of goods caused by his negligence, the bailee in possession can recover the value of the goods, although he would have had a good answer to an action by the bailor for damages for the loss of the thing bailed.

The position, that possession is good against a wrongdoer & that the latter cannot set up the jus tertii unless he claims under it, is well established in our law, & really concludes this case against resps. As I shall show presently, a long series of authorities establishes this in actions of trover & trespass at the suit of a possessor; & the principle being the same, it follows that he can equally recover the whole value of the goods in an action on the case for their loss through the tortious conduct of deft. I think it involves this also, that the wrongdoer who is not defending under the title of the bailor is quite unconcerned with what the rights are between the bailor & bailee, & must treat the possessor as the owner of the goods for all purposes quite irrespective of the rights & obligations as between him & the bailor (COLLINS, M.R.).—THE WINKFIELD, [1902] P. 42; 71 L. 56. Taking in execution.]—Where a sheriff seized bank notes & money under a fi. fa. & immediately thereupon appropriated them to an execution under another fi. fa. against the first execution creditor:—Held: Judgments Act, 1838 (c. 110), s. 12, did not justify such appropriation, & the first execution creditor had a right to have the proceeds of the levy paid over to him.

The meaning of Judgments Act, 1838 (c. 110), s. 12, is, that money, bank notes, bills, etc., taken in execution by the sheriff, are to be placed on the same footing as goods, & the proceeds of goods taken in execution, & to be subject to the same rights & liabilities. . . . Goods taken in execution do not, by the act of seizure, become the property of the execution creditor, although it is the duty of the sheriff to pay over the proceeds to him; & so in the case of money, bank notes, etc., seized, the sheriff is only bound to pay over the proceeds of the levy, although he may, if he pleases, pay over the very money, bank notes, etc., seized (per OUR.).—COLLINGRIDGE v. PAXTON (1851), 11 C. B. 683; 2 L. M. & P. 654; 21 L. J. C. P. 39; 18 L. T. O. S. 140; 16 Jur. 18; 138 E. R. 643.

57. Wrongful taking.]—Goods were obtained from defts. by A. by false pretences, & were afterwards sold by him to pltf., from whose possession they were subsequently retaken & removed by defts.; & in trover against defts., for such seizure & conversion, pltf. recovered a verdict for £145, the value of the goods. At the time the action was brought & tried, pltf. was aware that A. was in custody awaiting his trial for the above offence, & A. was, in fact, tried & convicted thereof on the day after pltf. had recovered the aforesaid verdict. Upon a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the jury should have been directed to take into consideration the probability of A.'s conviction for false pretences, & that the damages were excessive:—Held: by the effect & operation of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 57, upon the conviction of A. there was relation back to the time of the fraud committed by him upon defts., & that the goods remained the property of defts. from the first, the property therein never having been out of them, & what they did was simply to retake possession of their own property; & the ct. made the rule for a new trial absolute, subject to pltf.'s assenting to a stay of proceedings upon payment of the costs of the action & of the rule, with 40s. damages.—NICKLING v. 58. —.]—Under Larceny Act, 1861 (c. 96), s. 100, which provides that if any person guilty of a misdemeanour in obtaining goods, such as obtaining goods by false pretences, shall be indicted by the owner of the property & convicted, in such case the property shall be restored to the owner or his representative, & the ct. before whom any person shall be tried for any such misdemeanour shall have power to award writs of restitution for the property, or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner; when a contract for the sale of goods has been induced by false pretences, & the owner of the goods has prosecuted the fraudulent buyer to conviction, the property in the goods reverts in the owner on & at the date of the conviction, & he can then recover them from the person in whose possession they are, even though that person had before the conviction bought them in market overt, or otherwise, without notice of the fraud.

It is not necessary as a condition precedent to the recovery of the goods that an order of restitution should have been obtained.

If the goods were not sold in market overt the statute was not wanted, for a thief has no property in stolen goods (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—VILMONT v. BENTLEY (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 322; 56 L. J. Q. Pltf. took it & counted it, & was in the act of counting it a second time, when the cashier, having discovered that the drawer's account was overdrawn, demanded the money back, & upon pltf.'s refusal, detained him & took it from him by force:—Held: the property in the notes & money had passed from the bankers to the bearer of the cheque, & the payment was complete & could not be revoked.—CHAMBERS v. MILLER (1802), 13 C. B. N. S. 125; 1 New Rep. 95; 32 L. J. C. P. 30; 7 L. T. 850; 9 Jur. N. S. 626; 11 W. R. 236; 143 E. R. 50.

B. recovered judgment in ejectment, & upon execution of the writ of possession turned A.'s servants off the premises, refusing, at the same time, to allow them to remove the lime remaining on the premises. 60 1. Where species changed.—A. purchased bona fide from B. oil which B. had no right to sell, as it belonged to C. A. paid for the oil & obtained delivery. With the oil & other materials A. manufactured lard, which was sold in the ordinary course of business to customers. In an action by C. against A. for delivery of the oil or payment of its value:—Held: defender, by creating in the process of manufacture a new species which could not be again resolved into its original elements, became, under the doctrine of specification, proprietor of the substance manufactured, & was bound to pay pursuer a sum representing the value of the oil.—INTERNATIONAL BANKING CORP. v. FERGUSON, SHAW & SONS, [1910] S. C. 182.—SCOT.

SECT. 3.—RIGHTS ANNEXED TO OWNERSHIP.

68. Right to possession—Prima facie right.—While the right of property in a chattel is admitted to be in one person, the right of possession of that chattel cannot be absolutely & adversely in another.

—CLERK v. ADAM (1832), 1 Cl. & Fin. 242; 6 E. R. 908, H. L.

69. ———.]—Any asportation of a chattel for the use of deft., or a third person, amounts to a conversion; for this simple reason, that it is an act inconsistent with the general right of dominion which the owner of a chattel has in it, who is entitled to the use of it at all times & in all places. When, therefore, a man takes that chattel, either for the use of himself or of another, it is a conversion. So, if a man has possession of any chattel, & refuses to deliver it up, this is an assertion of a right inconsistent with my general dominion over it, & the use which at all times, & in all places, I am entitled to make of it; & consequently amounts to an act of conversion (ALDERSON, B.).—FOULDES v. WILLOUGHBY (1841), 8 M. & W. 540; 1 Dowl. N. S. 86; 10 L. J. Ex. 364; 5 Jur. 534; 151 E. R. 1153.

70. ———.]—(1) To an action of debt deft. pleaded: (a) The seizure by plff., as a distress for rent, of certain goods of sufficient value to satisfy rent & costs due from deft., with the costs of sale, etc.; that plff. kept the goods nearly two years without selling them, & then, by agreement with deft., kept them absolutely upon the terms of discharging deft. from the debt due; (b) a wrongful seizure of deft.'s goods by plff., the goods being alleged to be of greater value than the debt due from deft. to plff., & an agreement that the parties should be quit of all claims upon each other, & that plff. should keep the goods; (c) a similar plea with the additional term, that deft. should give up possession of certain premises. Plff. replied, traversing, that the goods were of the value assigned in the several pleas. On special demurrer:—Held: the replications were bad.

(2) He says they were wrongfully seized. He might, therefore, retake them (COLTMAN, J.).

(3) As the seizure was wrongful, he has still the property in them (WILDE, C.J.).

72. ——— As between husband & wife.—A wife, who had separate estate, agreed to purchase from her husband some furniture & other personal chattels belonging to him, which were in the house in which she lived with him. She stipulated that a receipt for the purchase-money should be given to her, & instructed her solr. to draw the receipt. After the purchase-money had been paid to the husband he signed a receipt which the wife's solr. had prepared. This document acknowledged the receipt from the wife of the agreed sum, as the purchase-money "for all my furniture, plate, etc., which I hereby acknowledge are now absolutely her property." There was no formal delivery of the goods by the husband to the wife, but they remained as they had previously been, in the house in which the husband & the wife were living together. She subsequently sent part of the goods to her own bankers, & the remainder were afterwards taken in execution by judgment creditor of the husband. In an interpleader issue between the wife & execution creditor:—Held: (1) the receipt, notwithstanding the words at the end of it, did not form part of the transaction passing the property in the goods to the wife, but the property had passed to her by the prior & independent bargain, & consequently the receipt did not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), & the wife was entitled to the goods as against execution creditor; (2) the wife had a sufficient possession of the goods to take the case out of the Act, for the situation of the goods being consistent with their being in the possession of either the husband or the wife, the law would attribute the possession to the wife who had the legal title.—*RAMSAY v. 73. ———.]—By a post-nuptial deed in May, 1914, a husband gave his wife certain household furniture in the house in which the husband & wife lived together. The furniture remained in the house, which continued to be occupied by the husband & wife. The deed was not registered under Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31). Execution creditors under a judgment recovered in 1920 against the husband levied execution at the house. The wife claimed the furniture. In an interpleader issue between the wife & execution creditors:—Held: the furniture was not in the possession or apparent possession of the husband within Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), s. 8; nor in his order & disposition or reputed ownership within Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 10.

of an agreement that they were to be irrevocable. The husband died in 1911, neither his will nor that of his wife having at that time been revoked. 96. How arising—Investment of moneys in joint names—In unequal shares.—ROBINSON v. PRESTON, No. 97, post.

97. — Rents of real estates held as tenants in common.—(1) Where stock has been purchased, in the joint names of two, out of money standing to their joint account in the bank, it is not necessarily to be considered in equity as held in joint tenancy, but the origin of the money & the acts & intentions of the parties may be looked to, & a conclusion in favour of a tenancy in common drawn from the circumstances.

(2) The distinction taken in equity between a purchase by two advancing equal shares of the purchase-money in their joint names, & a mtge. to them under the same circumstances, the first being considered to create a joint tenancy, & the other a tenancy in common, disapproved of.

Two sisters being tenants in common of real estates had money arising from the rents standing to their joint account in the bank. Part of the money was from time to time invested in the purchase of stock in the joint names, & part on mtge., the mtged. premises being conveyed to them as tenants in common. Each sister, by will, affected to dispose of her share of the stock:—Held: they were entitled to the stock as tenants in common, & not as joint tenants.

(3) The law is settled as to the investment of moneys in the names of two or more persons in the purchase of property. If invested in unequal shares, the purchasers remain tenants in common of the purchased property; if in equal shares, & the matter on the face of it purports to be a joint tenancy, then it is considered by this ct. to be a joint tenancy & no equity is supposed to intervene by which it can be reduced to a tenancy in common (PAGE-WOOD, V.-C.).—ROBINSON v. PRESTON (1858), 4 K. & J. 505; 27 L. J. Ch. 395; 31 L. T. O. S. 366; 4 Jur. N. S. 186; 70 E. R. 211.

C., the sole exor., transferred it into the joint names of C. & D. Afterwards, by the deaths of A. & B., C. & D. became equally entitled to the shares of A. & B.:—Held: C. & D. were tenants in common of the whole fund.

(2) Under a will, C. & D. were entitled equally to a sum of stock. C., the exor., with the concurrence of D., transferred it into the joint names of C. & D.:—Held: they thereby became joint tenants.—JAMES v. GODWIN (1802), 31 Beav. 25; 54 E. R. 1046.

99. — Corporation & Individual.—A transfer of stock into the joint names of a corpn. & an individual creates a tenancy in common, & not a joint tenancy, & therefore, by virtue of sections 1 & 22 of the National Debt Act, 1870 (c. 71), ss. 1 & 22, the Bank of England is under no obligation to register such transfer.

In the case of real estate an assignment of property to an individual & a corpn. would not create a joint tenancy, but a tenancy in common. From Coke upon Littleton, 190a, Williams' Saunders, Vol. II., Part 2, p. 318, note 4, Blackstone's Commentaries, & the other ancient text writers which were cited, it no doubt appears that an attempt to create a joint tenancy in a corpn. & an individual must fail, for two reasons. In the first place the grantees take in different capacities. The grant to the corpn. is a grant to the corpn. & its successors; the grant to an individual is a grant to the individual & his heirs; & those two estates cannot be blended in the manner necessary for the creation of a joint tenancy (MATHEW, J.).—*LAW GUARANTEE & TRUST SOCIETY v. (2) The conversion of a chattel by a tenant in common to its general & profitable application, though it change the form of the substance, is not such a destruction of the subject-matter, as to prevent pltf. from taking & using it in its altered state; therefore it creates no right of action.—*FENNINGS v. 114. Delivery of ship.—Certain shipbuilders in America built several ships, mortgaged them there, sent them to England for sale, sold them there, & paid the mtgees. in America. The mtges. were duly registered in America; but notice of the mtge. having been indorsed on the certificate of registry in one case, & having impeded the sale, it was agreed that no such notice should be indorsed in future. Another ship was accordingly sent over & sold; the shipbuilders received the purchase-money, & failed, leaving the mtgee. unpaid. The mtgee. filed his bill to establish his claim against the purchaser:—Held: the rights to the ship acquired under American law must be recognised; but the purchase, having taken place in this country, must be governed by English law; a ship is not like an ordinary chattel, which passes by delivery, & there is no market overt for ships; the purchaser of a foreign ship is bound to make inquiries as to the title.—*HOOPER v. Early in 1839 M. took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, but his assignee never claimed the goods. In Nov. 1839, W. executed an assignment of the goods to pltf., & in Mar. 1840, the goods were seized under a fi. fa. against W. The goods always had remained in the possession of M. as the ostensible owner of them, & W. never was in possession of them:—Held: on these facts J. had made out his property in the goods, & as W. had never been in the possession of the goods, & never could have gained false credit by them, there was nothing from which the jury ought to infer that the assignment was fraudulent; the fact, that the assignment was kept at M.'s house was immaterial, & it was also immaterial that no possession of the goods had been delivered by W. to pltf., as the right to them would pass by the execution of the deed.—*BURLING v. ### A. (a) ii.

a. Change in character of possession.—Where possession is changed it need not be given personally to the creditor, purchaser or mtgee.; it may equally be given to a trustee or bailee for him, & the debtor may increase the claim of such bailee or may charge the goods with further sums in favour of other persons.—McMASTER v. GARLAND (1880), 31 C. P. 320.—CAN.

b. —A person who already has the lawful possession of a thing may effect delivery merely by virtue of his own intention, express or implied, to hold the thing in future as agent for another, but the dominium does not pass if the possessor intends to perfect the transfer by a physical delivery of the thing.—MILLS & SORE v. BENJAMIN BROTHERS' TRUSTEES (1876), Buch. 115.—S. AF.

Sect. 2.—How property alienated: Sub-sect. 1, A. (c), & B.; sub-sect. 2. Sects. 3 & 4.]

120. General rule.]—(1) A gift of a chattel capable of delivery, made per verba de praesenti by a donor to a donee, & assented to by the donee, whose assent is communicated to the donor, does not pass the property in the chattel without delivery.

(2) This review of the authoritative leads us to conclude that according to the old law no gift or grant of a chattel was effectual to pass it whether by parol or by deed, & whether with or without consideration unless accompanied by delivery: that on that law two exceptions have been grafted, one in the case of deeds, & the other in that of contracts of sale where the intention of the parties is that the property shall pass before delivery (FRY, L.J.).

(3) In my opinion, it always was the law of England that an owner of a chattel could transfer his ownership thereof to another person by way of exchange or barter, or by way of bargain & sale for a consideration, or by way of & as a mere gift, or by will (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(4) The proposition before this ct. on a question of gift or not is, that the one gave & the other accepted. The transaction described in the proposition is a transaction begun & completed at once. It is a transaction consisting of two contemporaneous acts which at once complete the transaction, so that there is nothing more to be done by either party (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—*COCHRANE v. #### SECT. 4.—RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION.

131. General rule.—A condition, inconsistent with the gift, is void; therefore, upon a bequest to A. for life, & at his decease, to his heirs, exors., etc.; but if he attempts to dispose of the principal, over, he takes the absolute interest; & the condition being inconsistent with it, is void.—BRADLEY v. PEIXOTO (1797), 3 Ves. 324; 30 E. R. 1034.

132. —See —The law of this country says that all property shall be alienable; but there has been one exception to that general law, for restraint on anticipation or alienation was allowed in the case of a married woman (JESSEL, M.R.).—*Re RIDLEY, BUCKTON v. 133. —See —It is clearly settled that a gift over upon an attempt to alien an absolute interest previously given it as void as a condition (KAY, J.).—Re DUGDALE, DUGDALE v. DUGDALE (1888), 38 Ch. D. 176; 57 L. J. Ch. 634; 58 L. T. 581; 36 W. R. 462.

134. Application of rule.—To gift for life.—Property cannot be given for life any more than absolutely without the power of alienation being incident to the gift; & although a life interest be expressed to be given, it may be well determined by an apt limitation over.—ROCHFORD v. HACKMAN (1852), 9 Hare, 475; 21 L. J. Ch. 511; 19 L. T. O. S. 5; 16 Jur. 212; 68 E. R. 597.

B. 16; Wynn v. Conway Corp., [1914] 2 Ch. 705.

135. —To equitable limitation.—Trust estate.—By an instrument in the form of a settlement but proved as a will, real & personal estate was given to trustees upon trust for the sole use & benefit of resp., son of the settlor, his heirs, exors., & administrators, to be assigned & transferred to him as soon as conveniently might be after the settlor's death, subject to a proviso that if resp. should die unmarried & without issue his share should go over, & also that the property assigned in trust for resp. was to be held by the trustees upon the express condition that he should not during his life have power to mortgage, sell, alien, charge, or incumber any part of the property, & in that event the trustees should stand possessed of such property in trust for other persons.—Held: resp. took an absolute interest in fee simple under the instrument, & the condition of forfeiture in case of charge or alienation was therefore void as repugnant; & accordingly he could be ordered to secure to his divorced wife an annual sum for maintenance by a charge on his interest under the instrument.

With regard to the legal estate it was hardly contended that such a proviso as this would not be bad as being inconsistent with the estate already given to resp. But it was suggested that in the case of trust estates that rule does not apply. I cannot follow that. It is very true that in the case of married women a restraint on anticipation has been allowed, but that restraint cannot be introduced in the case of an equitable limitation in favour of a man (COTTON, L.J.).—CORBETT v. CORBETT (1888), 14 P. D. 7; 58 L. J. P. 17; 60 L. T. 74; 37 W. R. 114, C. A.

136. Instrument restraining alienation.—Construed strictly.—It must be borne in mind that the cts. have always leaned against a restraint on alienation, & for this very obvious reason, that to give property to a person involves giving him a power to alienate it, & an instrument which, while giving property, takes away that incident to it must always be construed strictly (FRY, L.J.).—STODDON v. LEE, [1891] 1 Q. B. 661; 60 L. J. Q. B. 669; 64 L. T. 494; 55 J. P. 533; 39 W. R. 467, C. A.

Part I.—In General.

1. Constable an officer of the law.]—A constable is one of the most ancient officers in the realm for the conservation of the peace, & by his office he is a conservator of the peace; & if he sees any breaking of the peace, he may take & imprison him until he find surety by obligation to keep the peace; & if a man in fury be purposed to kill, maim, or beat another; the constable seeing it may arrest & imprison him until his rage be passed, for the conservation of the peace. If a man lays an infant which cannot help itself upon a dunghill, or openly in the field, so that the beasts or fowls may destroy it, the constable seeing it may commit the party so doing to prison; for what greater breach of the peace can there be than to put such an infant by such means in danger of its life (POPHAM, C.J.).—ANON. (1593), Poph. 12; 79 E. R. 1135.

7. When fines & penalties payable to receiver.—By magistrates' clerks.—By Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (c. 44), s. 37, all sums adjudged by justices of peace to be paid for any offence against the Act are to be paid to the receiver of the Metropolitan police district, who, by Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (c. 44), s. 10, is to apply all moneys applicable to the purposes of the Act to payment of salaries, etc., of the police force, & of all other charges & expenses in carrying the Act into execution. By Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47), Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (c. 71), & Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1840 (c. 84), certain penalties inflicted by magistrates within the Metropolitan police district are to be paid over to the receiver, who is directed to pay salaries, expenses, & charges attending the Metropolitan police cts., & in carrying the Acts into execution, & to apply the sums which he receives to the purposes of the Act; & the clerks of the magistrates within the district are to keep an account of such fines & penalties, to be rendered to the receiver quarterly; & the magistrates are to cause the amount to be paid to him. The clerks of the justices of a part of Surrey, within the Metropolitan police district, for which no police ct. had been established, claimed to deduct from the amount payable to the receiver the amount of their fees for summonses granted on the application of officers of the police force:—Held: the clerks were entitled to such fees; but they were not entitled to deduct them from the amount payable to the receiver, or in any way to recover them from him, the payment of such fees not falling under the description of carrying the Acts into execution.—WRAY v. CHAPMAN (1850), 14 Q. B. 742; 4 New Mag. Cas. 55; 19 L. J. M. C. 155; 14 L. T. O. S. 439; 14 J. P. 95; 14 Jur. 687; 117 E. R. 280.

8. ——— Penalties under Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (c. 38).—On a summary conviction, under the above Act before a Metropolitan police magistrate:—Held: the half of the penalty which was not paid to the informer was payable to the receiver of the Metropolitan police, & not to the overseer; & it made no difference that, under sect. 10 of same Act, there had been an appeal to the quarter sessions against the conviction, which had been there affirmed, & the clerk of the peace had included the half penalty in the estreat of fines & forfeitures imposed at the sessions.—WRAY v. ELLIS (1858), 1 E. & E. 276; 28 L. J. M. C. 45; 32 L. T. O. S. 157; 22 J. P. 800; 5 Jur. N. S. 624; 7 W. R. 91; 120 E. R. 913.

Annotation:—Dtd. R. v. Titterton, [1895] 2 Q. B. 61.

9. ——— Penalties imposed by two justices in petty session.—By Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1840 (c. 84), s. 6, any two justices having jurisdiction within the Metropolitan police district shall have, while sitting together publicly in the petty sessions ct. or room, except in divisions assigned to the police courts, all the powers, privileges, & duties which any one magistrate of the police courts has by Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47), & Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1830 (c. 71):—Held: this did not make penalties, which were recovered before two justices sitting as above, penalties recovered before a police magistrate; & therefore the shares of such penalties unappropriated to the informer or party aggrieved did not go to the receiver of the Metropolitan police district.—METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT RECEIVER v. BELL (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 433; 41 L. J. M. C. 153; 37 J. P. 55.

10. ——— Penalties in respect of sale of food.—An inspector of an authority who had appointed an analyst, having prosecuted to conviction before a Metropolitan police magistrate an offender under Margarine Act, 1887 (c. 29), the magistrate imposed a penalty, but made no direction as to its application:—Held: the application of the penalty was a part of the "proceedings" within the meaning of Margarine Act, 1887 (c. 29), s. 12, & the penalty, having been recovered on a prosecution instituted by an officer of the local authority, must be applied as directed by Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1875 (c. 63), s. 20, Margarine Act, 1887 (c. 29), s. 11, notwithstanding; Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1875 (c. 63), s. 26, abrogated Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (c. 71), s. 47, so far as it applied to penalties recovered on prosecutions instituted by such officers; & the penalty imposed in the present case was consequently payable to the inspector of the authority & not to the receiver of the Metropolitan police.—*R. v. 15. Formation of districts—Power of quarter sessions—Single parish as separate district—Sufficiency of report to Secretary of State.]—Under County Police Act, 1840 (c. 88), s. 27, a single parish may be constituted a separate police district by itself.

It is no objection to an order of quarter sessions forming county police districts, which a ct. of law can entertain, that the report required by County Police Act, 1840 (c. 88), s. 27, to be sent from the sessions to the Secretary of State, does not contain sufficient materials.—*Ex p. 16. —Power of standing joint committee.]—The control over the division of a county into police districts is, under Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), vested in the standing joint committee of the county.

The effect of this sect. [Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), s. 9 (1)] is to give the standing joint committee control over the division of the county into police districts. The payment of the county police is one thing; the distribution of the county police into districts is another (HAWKINS, J.).—*Re LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888. Ex p. 22. — Costs of legal proceedings by or against police officer—[Indictment against borough constable.]—The town council has no power under Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (c. 76), to order the expenses of an indictment against a borough constable to be paid out of the borough fund.

Semble: the watch committee might, under Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (c. 76), s. 82, make such an order, subject to the approbation of the council.—R. v. THOMPSON (1844), 5 Q. 23. — Action for false imprisonment against officer.]—The chief constable of E. was sued for a malicious prosecution, he having by order of the borough magistrates laid an information against certain persons for conspiracy. The town council of E. directed the town clerk to defend the action, & subsequently directed payment of the costs of the action out of the borough fund or borough rates:—Held: the town council had no power to order payment of the chief constable's costs out of the borough funds under Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (c. 76), s. 82.—R. v. EXETER CORPN. (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 135; 44 L. T. 101; 45 J. P. 158; 29 W. R. 441.

24. Suspension from duty—Power of justices as watch committee.]—A borough police constable sued the watch committee to recover his pay for a period during which he had been suspended by deft.'s from duty for an offence against discipline.

Defts. alleged that pltf. was properly suspended during that period, & was therefore not entitled to pay. Pltf. contended that defts. had no power to suspend him, because the power of suspension conferred upon them by Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (c. 50), s. 191 (4), was impliedly repealed by Police Act, 1919 (c. 40), & the regulations made thereunder by the Secretary of State:—Held: there being nothing in Police Act, 1919 (c. 40), & the regulations thereunder which dealt in any way with suspension, the power conferred by Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (c. 50), upon the watch committee or two justices was not impliedly repealed, & defts. had power to suspend & to stop pltf.'s pay during the period of suspension.—*WALLWORK v. 2. — Agreement as to fees—

Validity of.]—Pltf. appointed deft. chief of police of the town of S. at a named salary, but stipulated that he should act as county constable within the town only, & account for & pay over to pltf. all fees received by him from the county as a reward for ser-VICES performed by him as a county constable:—Held: under 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16, & 49 Geo. III. c. 126, the agreement to account for such fees was invalid.—STRAFORD CORPN. v. WILSON (1884), 8 O. R. 104.—GAN.

four constables for the parish annually:—Held: the presence of the rector at a vestry for the election of a constable was not necessary if thirteen other trustees were present.

(2) The trustees having so appointed the four constables for the year, might also, on the removal from the parish of one of the persons so appointed, elect another person in his stead; for that they were not functi officio, & were the proper persons to supply the vacancy.

(3) Indictment charged, that deft. being elected to the office of constable, had neglected & refused to take upon himself the execution of the office. The proof was, that he refused to take the oath of office:—Held: that was prima facie evidence of a refusal to take upon himself the execution of the office; the indictment sufficiently charged an offence, by alleging that deft. had wholly neglected & refused to take on himself the execution of the office, & it was not necessary to state that he had refused to be sworn.—R. v. BRAIN (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 814; 1 L. J. M. C. 53; 110 E. R. 224.

31. — Removal by certiorari.]—Certiorari will not lie to bring up a resolution of the vestry for the appointment of paid constables under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 118, but it will lie to bring up the appointment itself made by the justices in petty sessions, where the proceedings in vestry have not been conducted in conformity to 53 Geo. 3, c. 69, amended by 59 Geo. 3, c. 85; a poll having been demanded & refused & the resolution being carried by a show of hands.—Re HIPPERHOLME CUM BRIGHOUSE CONSTABLES (1847), 5 Dow. & L. 79; 2 Saund. & C. 98; 11 J. 32. — Preparation & return of lists by overseers—Mandamus to prepare & return.]—Under Parish Constables Act, 1842 (c. 109), ss. 2 & 3, where justices issue a precept to overseers requiring them to return a list of a competent number of men in their parish to serve as constables, & the overseers accordingly summon a vestry within the fourteen days after receiving the precept, prescribed in Parish Constables Act, 1842 (c. 109), s. 3, the vestry has no discretion, but must make out the list. Therefore, where such vestry, having met in obedience to the precept, had adjourned for a twelvemonth, & made no return, this ct., on motion made after the expiration of the fourteen days, issued a mandamus commanding the overseers to summon a vestry for the purpose of making out & returning a list. Although the affidavits in support of the rule disclosed no ground for considering the appointment of the parochial constables to be necessary, & although, in opposition to the rule, it was deposed that the inhabitants considered the appointment of parochial constables to be superfluous & uselessly expensive, a paid police having been appointed under County & Borough Police Act, 1856 (c. 69). Therefore where a township had four overseers & four churchwardens, & seven were for allowing the constable's accounts, against the sense of the eighth & a majority of the lay-payers; & two justices afterwards allowed the

57. Appointment—Power to appoint yearly—In addition to appointment in emergency.]—The borough of M. which was incorporated by charter in Oct. 1838, & has a separate commission of the peace & grant of quarter sessions, is situate locally within the M. division, one of several into which the County Palatine of Lancaster is divided & in & for each of which, including the M. division, petty sessions are held. An order was made at special sessions for the borough under Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41), s. 13, requiring the county treasurer to pay for the services of special constables called out & appointed by justices of the borough under the same Act for the staves, etc. On mandamus to pay, & return thereto:—Held: no answer that the constables were called out within the M. division & the order was not made by justices for the division. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 83, empowering borough justices to appoint special constables once a year & to pay them out of the borough fund does not supersede the general authority given to justices of any town, etc., by Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41), s. 1, to appoint special constables on information that a riot may be apprehended. A borough newly incorporated under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, is, in respect of its liabilities under sects. 114, 117, a town "contributory to the public rate for" the "county" within Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41), s. 13; & its justices therefore may order the county treasurer to pay the recompense, & costs of the staves, etc., of special constables appointed by them under the latter Act.—*R. v. 60. — & regulation—Power of Metropolitan Commissioners.]—By Special Constables Act, 1914 (c. 61), s. 1 (1), "His Majesty may, by order in Council, make regulations with respect to the appointment & position of special constables appointed during the present war under the Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41) . . . & may, by those regulations, provide (inter alia) . . . (c) for the application to special constables to which the regulations apply of any of the provisions of the Police Acts, 1839, to 1910 . . . subject to such modifications as may be specified in the regulations. . . ." By Police Act, 1839 (c. 93), s. 6, the chief constable may at his pleasure dismiss all or any of the other constables to be appointed for the county.

Regulations known as "The Special Constables Order, 1914, were made under the Act. By regulation 6 the chief officer of police may at his pleasure dismiss any special constable:—Held: the regulation was not ultra vires, inasmuch as upon the true construction of the word "position" in Special Constables Act, 1914 (c. 61), s. 1 (1), viewed in the light of the power of dismissal by the chief constable contained in Police Act, 1839 (c. 93), s. 6, which is applied with the necessary modifications by clause (c), it was the intention of the Legislature to confer the power to make regulations not only with respect to the position of special constables while they hold that office, but also with respect to the determination of the office; therefore, the Comr. of Metropolitan police, who is by the schedule to the order the "chief officer of police" for the Metropolitan police district, has the power to dismiss a Metropolitan special constable.

Even without the aid of clause (c) the words in Special Constables Act, 1914 (c. 61), s. 1 (1), conferring power to make regulations with regard to the "appointment & position" of special constables would in their natural meaning include a power to make regulations with respect to the termination of the office of a special constable (LUSH, J.).—METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR. v. MARYLEBONE JJ. (1868), 37 L. J. M. C. 181.

68. — — — — —.]—By Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41), s. 1, if it shall be made to appear to two justices of any county, riding, or division having a separate commission of the peace, that a tumult or riot is apprehended within any parish or place within the division or limits for which the justices usually act, they are empowered to appoint special constables. By Special Constables Act, 1831 (c. 41), s. 13, the justices acting for the division or limits within which the special constables have been called out, at a special session to be held for the purpose, are empowered to order the payment of the expenses of such constables, the order to be made on the treasurer of the county of which they are justices. Constables having been appointed & called out for the parish of M., within the M. petty sessional division of a county:—Held: an order for the expenses was rightly made at a special session of the justices usually acting in the petty sessional division, & need not be made at a special session of the whole body of justices for the county.—R. v. HAMILTON (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 718; sub nom. R. v. MIDDLESEX JJ., 18 L. T. 680; 32 J. P. 661; 16 W. R. 1168.

for their trouble, etc.; such order to be made on the treasurer of the county. Special constables were appointed by justices for the county of C., but their appointment was not made in the manner pointed out by the Act. They acted, & an order on the county treasurer was made for payment for their trouble, etc., by justices then sitting for the purpose of auditing the accounts of the expenses of special constables after the business of an ordinary petty session had been concluded. No notice for the holding of any special session had been given. The order was general in form, being a mere direction to pay, & it did not recite any of the facts which gave the justices jurisdiction to make it. The treasurer paid the amount, & the payment was afterwards allowed at quarter sessions:—Held: although the appointment of the special constables was not regular, & assuming that the order for their payment was originally invalid, because not made at a special session held for the purpose, yet the ct., in the exercise of its discretion, would not grant a certiorari to bring up the order, as the proceedings were completely finished & no benefit could arise from re-opening them.

Semble: such an order [for payment of expenses of special constables] is in the nature of a direction to the officer of the justices, & need not show on the face of it that the justices signing it had jurisdiction to make it.—R. v. NEWBOROUGH (LORD) (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 585; 10 B. & S. 586; 38 L. J. M. C. 129; 17 W. L. 861; sub nom. R. v. CARNARVONSHIRE J.J., 20 L. T. 818.

73. ——— Expenses of ordinary citizens not allowed—Riot.—It is said that, because the magistrates have power to call on the soldiers, as citizens, to keep the peace, therefore the county funds are liable for the maintenance of the soldiers while so engaged. There is an utter absence of authority for that proposition. There was no authority cited to show that the magistrates are bound to maintain the troops, nor is it shown that persons other than soldiers have ever been in any way reimbursed by the magistrates under such circumstances, unless in the case of special constables, which is specially provided for. On the other hand, there is something on which an argument by analogy in favour of the opposite view may be founded. The Act of 2 Hen. 5, stat. 1, c. 8, after providing for the suppression of riots by the justices, & the sheriff, or undersheriff of the county, "with the power of the said county," contains this clause: "Provided always that the said justices, & other officers aforesaid, shall exercise their offices aforesaid at the King's cost in going & continuing in doing their said offices, by payment thereof to be made by the sheriff of the same county for the time being by indentures betwixt the sheriff & the said justices & other officers aforesaid, to be made of the payment aforesaid, whereof the said sheriff upon his account in the Exchequer may have due allowance." It is true that at that time there was no standing army; but the same services would be rendered as were rendered by the troops in the present case, & the Crown would bear the cost, not the county.

Both on authority such as there seems to be, & on considerations of convenience. . . I have come to the conclusion that there is no power to charge the expenses here in question on the county funds, & therefore that the order nisi for a mandamus ought to be discharged (DARLING, J.).

Defts. had no notice either of the appointment of the special constable or of the order for payment by them until after the same was made:—Held: the making of the order for the payment of the expenses of the special constable was a judicial proceeding, & defts. were entitled to notice before the order was made.—*R. v. 77. Consolidation of forces — Borough with commission of peace but no quarter sessions—Costs of prosecution before borough justices—Whether chargeable to county.—A borough having a population of over ten thousand had a separate commission of the peace & justices' clerk, but not a separate ct. of quarter sessions. The borough paid the justices' clerk by salary, & the clerk's fees received from prosecutions went to the borough fund, & the borough had the right of appointing its own police, but by arrangement, the county provided the borough with police, for which an agreed sum was paid to the county. Questions having arisen between the borough & the county as to the right to receive fines imposed by the borough justices when those fines were not appropriated by the statutes creating the offences, & as to the liability to bear the costs of prosecutions instituted by the police before the borough bench when those costs were not received in the proceedings, & it having been conceded that the county was entitled to receive the unappropriated fines & penalties:—Held: the costs of prosecutions undertaken by the police before the borough justices, in cases in which such costs are not remitted & are not recovered from debt. to the proceedings, fall upon the borough fund, & are not chargeable to the county fund, although the unappropriated fines go to the county fund.—*GEORGE v. with the authority of the magistrates of the petty sessional division, telegraphed for the military to be sent down, but the Home Secretary instead sent some metropolitan police. The chief constable also made agreements under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 25, with the police authorities of other counties & boroughs for the supply of extra police. These agreements contained provisions for the housing & feeding by the aided authority of the imported police. Pl'tfs., at the request of the chief constable, provided housing accommodation & meals for a number of the police so brought into the county & for the metropolitan police. The standing joint committee, who were the police authority for the county, expressly repudiated liability in respect of the metropolitan police on the ground that their assistance had not been requested. In an action by pl'tfs. against the standing joint committee & the county council to recover the expenses so incurred by them for housing & feeding the imported police:—Held: (1) defts. were liable for the expenses of housing & feeding the police other than the metropolitan police, the evidence showing either that the chief constable had antecedent authority from the standing joint committee to make the necessary contracts under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 25, for bringing them in & for housing & feeding them, or that the standing joint committee had ratified his acts; (2) defts. were not liable in respect of the metropolitan police, the standing joint committee not having asked for their assistance & having repudiated all liability in respect of them; (3) the standing joint committee had power to enter into the contracts so as to bind themselves, & they were therefore rightly sued upon them, the county council being properly joined as parties to the action as they were the persons who would have to pay the amount found due & against whom an order for payment might be necessary.—*GLAMORGAN COAL CO. v. See Statute of Winchester, 1285 (c. 6); County Police Act, 1839 (c. 93); Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47); City of London Police Act, 1839 (c. xciv); County & Borough Police Acts, 1850 (c. 32); 1919 (c. 84); Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 89); Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43); Police Act, 1919 (c. 46).

82. Duty to provide sufficient protection without payment—Agreement for payment for special protection.]—Although the police authority are bound to provide sufficient protection to life & property without payment, if in particular circumstances, at the request of an individual, they provide a special form of protection outside the scope of their public duty they may demand payment for it.

On the occasion of a strike a colliery manager applied for police protection for his colliery & insisted that it could only be efficiently protected by billeting a police force on the colliery premises. The police superintendent was prepared to provide what in his opinion was adequate protection by means of a mobile force, but refused to billet police officers at the colliery except on the terms of the manager agreeing to pay for the force so provided at a specified rate:—Held: there was nothing illegal in the agreement, nor was it void for want of consideration.—*GLASBROOK BROTHERS, LTD. v. #### SUB-SECT. 3.—RIGHT TO REWARDS FOR APPREHENSION OF WRONGDOERS.

83. Whether police entitled to reward—Police acting on information from others.]—An advertisement respecting a robbery of bank notes, promised "that whoever would give information by which the same might be traced, should on conviction of the parties, receive a reward of £20:—Held: the word "information" meant the first information; &, therefore, though pltf. had given sufficient information he was not entitled to recover, as it was not given until after other sufficient information had been received.—LANCASTER v. WALSH (1838), 4 M. & W. 16; 1 Horn & H. 258; 7 L. J. Ex. 209; 3 J. P. 511; 150 E. R. 1324.

84. ———.]—Deft.*, who had been robbed of jewellery, published an advertisement, headed "£30 reward," describing the articles stolen, & concluding thus:—"The above sum will be paid by the adjutant of the 41st regiment, on recovery of the property, & conviction of the offender, or in proportion to the amount recovered." A., a solicitor, on June 10, informed his sergeant that B. had admitted to him that he was the party who had committed the robbery, & the sergeant gave information at the police station. On June 14, pltf., a police constable, learning from C. that B. was to be met with at a certain place, went there & apprehended him. Pltf. by his activity & perseverance, afterwards succeeded in tracing & recovering nearly the whole of the property, & in procuring evidence to convict B.:—Held: pltf. was not, but A. was the party entitled to the reward.—THATCHER v. 85. ———.]—Ordinary duty of constable to give information.]—Deft. sued for the reward promised by advertisement to any person who would give such information as would lead to the conviction of those concerned in a burglary in his (deft.'s) house, pleaded, that pltf. was policeman of the district where the house was, & therefore that it was his duty to give the information without reward:—Held: the information might have been supplied under such circumstances as that pltf. had done more than his ordinary duty required, & therefore he was entitled to judgment.—ENGLAND v. DAVIDSON (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 856; 3 Per. & Dav. 594; 9 L. J. Q. B. 287; 4 Jur. 1032; 113 E. R. 640.

B., whom pltf. had taken into custody on suspicion of being concerned in the offence, offered to make certain disclosures if furnished with something to eat & drink. Pltf. communicated this offer to a sub-inspector of police, who took B. to a public-house, & gave him refreshment, whereupon B. made a voluntary confession, which resulted in his conviction & transportation for the crime in question:—Held: pltf. was entitled to the reward.—SMITH v. MOORE (1845), 1 C. B. 438; 5 L. T. O. S. 38; 9 J. P. 376; 9 Jur. 352; 135 E. R. 610

k. *Officer in charge of police station—Who is.]—*Where an officer in charge of a police station has gone on duty to a place outside his local jurisdiction the police officer next in rank deputed to act for him, even though he is absent from the station, so long as he is within the jurisdiction is an

87. ———.]—G., having been guilty of forgery, absconded. Defts. published a handbill offering a reward of £200 "to any person or persons giving such information to A., superintendent of police, Dewsbury, or to H., superintendent of police, Wakefield, as will lead to the apprehension of the said G." On Nov. 30, 1877, a person presented himself at the police office, Exeter, & asked for the chief constable (pltf.). On seeing him, the man (G.) said, "You hold a warrant for me; I am wanted for forgery." Pltf. left the man in a private room, & on searching the police-gazette & finding a notice therein, "W. G. wanted for forgery," telegraphed to the superintendent of police at Dewsbury, "Do you hold a warrant for the apprehension of W. G. for forgery?" Receiving an answer, "I still hold warrant for G., & should like him to be apprehended," pltf. apprehended & charged the man who was ultimately convicted. In answer to questions left to them, the jury found that G. was not in custody before the telegram was sent; but they were unable to agree as to whether or not he had given his name before it was sent:—Held: (1) pltf. was not entitled to claim the reward, the apprehension of G. not being the consequence of pltf.'s information, but of the criminal surrendering himself to justice.

(2) There are strong arguments of expediency, touching the administration of justice & the interests of the state, why constables should not be allowed to receive rewards (GROVE, J.).—BENT v. WAKEFIELD BANK (1878), 4 C. P. D. 1; 39 L. T. 576; 43 J. P. 55; 27 W. R. 168; 14 Cox, C. C. 208.

89. — Alleged neglect to give information of apprehension.—Until reward advertised.]—A police constable apprehended a boy in Bedfordshire having in his possession a horse & gig under circumstances of suspicion, & discovering that the boy had absconded with them from Woolwich, gave notice to his superintendent, who within a reasonable time gave notice to deft., the boy's master. After the boy's apprehension, but before the master received notice thereof, the latter had issued an advertisement offering a reward of £10 to any one who would give such information as should lead to the recovery of the property & the apprehension of the thief:—Held: a plea charging the police constable with a breach of duty in neglecting to inform deft. of the boy's apprehension until after the issuing of the advertisement was no answer to an action by the constable for the reward.—NEVILLE v. KELLY (1862), 12 C. B. N. S. 740; 32 L. J. C. P. 118; 7 L. T. 160; 10 W. R. 697; 142 E. R. 1333.

90. — Information lodged through agents.]—On May 29 deft. instructed his printers to print handbills, offering a reward of £25 to the person who should give information to a superintendent of police, named P. leading to the conviction of the perpetrator of a certain crime. Pltf., a police officer, on the same morning, before the instructions to print the handbills had been given by deft., had communicated the desired information to a fellow police officer named C., with instructions to forward it to Superintendent P., & C. thereupon communicated the information, in accordance with the rules of the force, to his own immediate superior officer, Inspector L., who sent it on the same evening to Superintendent P., whom it reached in due course on the following morning, May 30, after the time when the said handbills had been delivered to & had been distributed by him to the neighbouring police stations:—Held: pltf., the importance of whose information was admitted, was entitled to the reward, the messengers, C. & L., through whom such information was conveyed to Superintendent P., being pltf.'s agents to convey, & not P.'s agents to receive said message.—GIBBONS v. PROCTOR (1891), 64 L. T. 594; 7 T. L. R. 462; sub nom. GIBSON v. PROCTOR, 55 J. P. 616, D. C.

96. — — — — —]—By Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871 (c. 87), s. 1, no prosecution shall be taken against any person for any offence under Sunday Observance Act, 1877 (c. 7), except with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the police district, or of two justices or a stipendiary magistrate having jurisdiction in the place:—Held: for the purpose of giving such consent the chief officer of police is a persona designata, & the consent cannot be given by the police officer who by the resolution of a council has been duly appointed to act in the absence of the chief officer as deputy for the chief officer & who is in fact so acting.—R. v. HALKETT, [1910] 1 K. B. 50; 101 L. T. 603; 22 Cox, C. C. 202; sub nom. R. v. HALKETT, Ex p. BUTINCK, 79 L. J. K. B. 12; 74 J. P. 12, D. C.

97. — Under Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 89), s. 28—Police neither party aggrieved nor authorised by local authority.]—By above sect. every one who to the annoyance & danger of the passengers wantonly throws stones is liable to a penalty. By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 171, the provisions of above Act with respect to the above was “for the purpose of regulating such matters in urban districts” incorporated in that Act. It is provided by Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 253, that “proceedings for the recovery of any penalty under this Act shall not, except as in this Act is expressly provided, be had or taken by any person other than by a party aggrieved or by the local authority of the district in which the offence is committed”:—Held: the district superintendent of police could lay an information under above sect., although not the party aggrieved or authorised by the local authority.—JOBSON v. HENDERSON (1900), 82 L. T. 260; 64 J. P. 425; 19 Cox, C. C. 477, D. C.

to compel one A. to abstain from working at the L. motor works, where A. had a legal right to work, intimidated him by assembling in large numbers & throwing eggs at him when he was on his way from work. The evidence was that while A. was returning from the L. works some of appts., each of whom was wearing a white ribbon, & all of whom had recently been working at the L. works, but were no longer in such employment, threw eggs, two of which struck A. Some of the appts. were not proved to have thrown eggs, but they were with appts. who did so. There were shouts of "Blacklegs" & "Dirty Scabs." A. had not authorised resp. to lay the information, but he stated that he would have proceeded if the police had not done so. The justices convicted appts.:—Held: resp. was entitled to lay the information.—YOUNG v. PECK (1912), 107 L. T. 857; 77 J. P. 49; 29 T. L. R. 31; 23 Cox, C. C. 270, D. C.

100. Prosecution also undertaken by private person—Right to conduct of prosecution—As against police.]—Where the principal person interested in prosecuting a prisoner is desirous of conducting the prosecution, he is entitled to do so & to be allowed the costs of the prosecution.

In a case of aggravated assault by a prisoner on his wife, the wife retained a solr. to prosecute her husband. In pursuance of this retainer, the solr. prepared & delivered a brief to counsel at the assizes, with instructions to conduct the prosecution. A constable of the county had been bound over by recognisances to prosecute, & the clerk to the magistrates, as was the usual custom prepared & delivered a brief to counsel to prosecute:—Held: the conduct of a prosecution should not be taken out of the hands of the person principally interested, if that person wishes to undertake it.—R. v. BUSHILL (1888), 52 J. P. 136; 16 Cox, C. C. 367.

101. Costs of prosecution—Assault committed on constable in execution of duty—Whether payable out of poor rate.]—The expenses of a constable, in prosecuting an assault committed on him in the execution of his duty, cannot be paid by the overseer out of the poor rate, & are not within 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 4.—R. v. BIRD (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 522; 106 E. R. 457.

102. — Recognisances by constable to prosecute.]—A constable apprehended an offender for a misdemeanor committed in his presence in a place of religious worship, & carried him before a magistrate, & was bound over by recognisance to prosecute him for the offence:—Held: the expenses of such a prosecution were not moneys expended by him in doing the business of his township, & he could not charge them in his accounts under 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 4.—R. v. SEVILLE (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 180; 106 E. R. 1158.

103. — Award of extra costs—Criminal Law Act, 1826 (c. 64).]—Stealing from the person is not within above Act, s. 28, so as to enable the ct. to award the constable extra costs.—R. v. THOMPSON (1843), 2 L. T. O. S. 247; 1 Cox, C. C. 43.

104. — Reimbursement of superintendent constable—Prosecution of vagrants—Liability of parish.]—A superintendent constable, appointed for a division comprehending the parish of C., under County Police Act, 1839 (c. 93) & County Police Act, 1840 (c. 88), expended money in fees to the justices' clerk in respect of vagrants apprehended in the parish of C. The parish, for many years before those statutes passed, had defrayed such expenses when incurred by the parish constables:—Held: (1) the parish was liable for the expenses, inasmuch as County Police Act, 1839 (c. 93), s. 8, puts such constables in the situation of parish constables, & therefore authority might be inferred, from the previous conduct of the parish, to make the disbursements in question. (2) These were not to be deemed extraordinary expenses, within County Police Act, 1839 (c. 93), s. 18, so as to be payable by the division under County Police Act, 1840 (c. 88).—R. v. CHELMSFORD (CHURCHWARDENS) (1843), 5 Q. B. 66; 3 Gal. & Dav. 357; 12 L. J. M. C. 139; 1 L. T. O. S. 108, 385; 7 J. P. 432, 447; 7 Jur. 879; 114 E. R. 1172.

106. ———.—To support an action against the hundred for damages on Riot Act, 1714 (c. 5), for the riotous demolition of a house, it is not necessary to prove that twelve rioters were assembled at the time. Such an action is maintainable by a trustee in whom the legal estate is vested for existing purposes, &, as it seems, even by a bare trustee of a satisfied term.—*PRITCHIT v. 110. Essentials of riot must be proved.—PRITCHIT v. WALDRON, No. 106, ante.

111. ———.—In an action under Riot (Damages)

Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2, to recover compensation for the injury or destruction of a building by persons riotously & tumultuously assembled together, the following facts were proved:—At nine o'clock on a night at the end of Oct. a number of youths of ages varying from fourteen to eighteen years were congregated together upon the foot pavement of a road in a low neighbourhood shouting & using rough language. The pavement adjoined a nine inch wall of considerable length inclosing a yard & let into a house. Some of the youths were standing with their backs against the wall & others were running against them, or against the wall with their hands extended. After they had gone backwards & forwards in this way for about fifteen minutes, the wall, to the extent of about twelve feet, fell. As soon as it fell the caretaker of the premises came out into the street, & the youths then dispersed in different directions:—Held: there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the youths to help one another by force if necessary against any person who might oppose them in the execution of their common purpose of injuring or destroying the wall; or of any force or violence, other than the force or violence used in the actual demolishing of the wall displayed in such a manner as to alarm any person of reasonable firmness & courage; & therefore the youths were not riotously & tumultuously assembled together within Riot (Damages) Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2.

Semle: in order to sustain a claim under Riot (Damages) Act, 1886 (c. 38), s. 2, it is necessary to prove all the elements of a riot.—FIELD v. METROPOLITAN POLICE RECEIVER, [1907] 2 K. 112. ———.—By a policy of assurance applt. agreed to indemnify resps. against loss by burglary, housebreaking, & theft of cash in the cashier's office in resp.'s bakery in Dublin, subject to the proviso that "this insurance does not cover loss directly or indirectly caused by or happening through or in consequence of (a) invasions, hostilities, acts of foreign enemy, riots, strikes, civil commotions, rebellions, insurrections, military or usurped power, or martial law, or the burning of property by order of any public authority. . . ." During the currency of the policy four armed men entered the resp.'s premises on a summer evening while it was still daylight, held up the employees with revolvers, & took possession of all the money they could find in the cashier's office. There was no disturbance in the neighbourhood at the time. In answer to a claim by resps. against applt. to recover the loss applt. relied on the proviso in the policy. The dispute having been referred to arbn. under a clause in the policy, the arbitrators, by an award stated in the form of a special case, being of opinion that the circumstances in which the money was stolen

Between four thousand & five thousand people having assembled to witness the race, the two competitors, after walking on the track, did not run, but disappeared by a back entrance. When this became known, the people assembled demanded the return of their entrance money. This demand was refused. A riot thereupon ensued, & much damage was done to pltf.'s property. 127. — Gradation according to rank—Constable acting on special services.—In 1878, the quarter sessions of N., in order to provide for the more efficient inspection of weights & measures & enforcement of Sale of Food & Drugs Act, 1875 (c. 63), & Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17), resolved to appoint two additional inspectors of police whose whole time should be devoted to the carrying out of the inspection of weights & measures & of the above-named Acts. In pursuance of this resolution the quarter sessions appointed applt. & another inspectors of weights & measures, & on the same day applt. & his colleague were appointed police constables of the county; & under an order of the chief constable, they were saluted & treated in the police force as superintendents. Applt. continued a member of the police force till his retirement in 1905. Up to 1902, besides discharging duties as inspector of weights & measures & in the enforcement of the above-named Acts, he performed some independent duties. He was accustomed to visit certain police stations & houses occupied by police inspectors, & sergeants, & constables, & examine & sign their books. Applt. had an allowance for a horse, & he was provided with a trap for his use in the performance of his duties. In 1890 the standing joint committee of N. passed a resolution that constables "up to the rank of walking inspector" should be entitled to retire on a pension without a medical certificate at fifty-two, & that constables "above that rank" should be entitled so to retire at fifty-six. There was nothing to show what was meant by "walking inspector" in the resolution. Applt. retired from the force without a medical certificate at fifty-three:—Held: he was entitled to a pension, as there was nothing to show that his rank was above that of walking inspector.—*STORY v. —A local Act directed that fees received by constables for the performance of occasional duties, or of any act in the execution of their duty for which a fee might be received, might be paid, by order of the justices for the county, to the credit of the Police Superannuation Fund:—Held: fees paid to such constables as inspectors of weights & measures did not come within the operation of the above sect., such fees not being paid to them in the execution of their duties as constables, but merely by virtue of their appointment as inspectors of weights & measures.—R. v. KESTIVEN J.J. (1889), 58 L. J. M. C. 157; 61 L. T. 51; 53 J. P. 661; 37 W. R. 670; 18 Cox, C. C. 680; D. C.

129. Medical examination of pensioner—Power of police authority to require attendance—Exercise of power not extended to collateral purpose—Illegal stoppage of pension.—(1) The power conferred upon a police authority by the Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 5, of requiring a pensioner to attend to be examined by a medical practitioner selected by them at a particular time & place, for the purpose of satisfying them that his incapacity to serve continues, cannot be exercised by the police authority for any collateral purpose.

A police authority, on July 12, 1894, resolved that their former chief constable, to whom they had granted a pension on the ground of incapacity by infirmity, should attend at Warwick on a specified day & hour for the purpose of being examined by two doctors as to his state of health, & that if he failed to do so his pension should be cancelled. The pensioner had been declared

A constable having died within twelve months after the grant of his pension, the police authority, on application of his sons, agreed to grant them a gratuity & gave a cheque for the amount, but subsequently finding that the sons were adults, they counter-bkpt. in 1891, & in 1892 a warrant had been issued for his arrest, on the ground that he being out of England had not attended his adjourned examination in bkpcy. He had been residing in Portugal since Apr. 1892; but in Mar. 1893, he had come to England for a day or two, & had been examined by a doctor, selected by the police authority, who had certified his continuing incapacity. He did not attend in compliance with the resolution of July 12, 1894, & the police authority cancelled his pension:—Held: upon the evidence, the police authority had used their statutory power of requiring the pensioner's attendance at Warwick, not for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to his continued incapacity, but for the purpose of assisting the Bkpcy. Ct.; & consequently, they had exceeded their jurisdiction, & the pensioner was entitled to a mandamus calling upon the police authority to show cause why they should not pay him the arrears of his pension.

(2) A police authority has no power under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 5 (4), to cancel a pension without requiring the pensioner to serve again.

(3) A police authority has power to fix the time & place for the examination of the pensioner by the medical practitioner whom they may select under the provisions of Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 5.—*R. v. 131. — Based on annual pay—What included therein—Value of free residence with gas & water.—(1) By Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), a constable, after a certain number of years' approved service is entitled to a pension, which is to be calculated on the amount of his "annual pay" at the date of his retirement.

A divisional inspector of police with his family resided free of rent at the police station, & had the free use of fuel, gas, & water:—Held: the value of the free residence & fuel, gas, & water was not part of his "pay" for the purpose of calculating his pension.

(2) When a constable appeals to quarter sessions, under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 11, from the decision of the watch committee as to the amount of his pension, a case may be stated for the opinion of the K. B. Div. on a question of law.—GOODWIN v. SHEFFIELD CORPN., [1902] 1 K. B. 629; 71

132. — Allowance for special duties.—By Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), a constable who has completed a certain number of years' approved service is entitled to a pension which is to be "calculated according to the amount of his annual pay at the date of his retirement."

A constable at the date of his retirement was receiving 39s. a week, namely, 32s. being the ordinary pay of his rank & service, & 7s. in respect of special duty which he had performed for some years. He signed the weekly pay lists in which the 32s. was entered in a column headed "Amount of Pay," & the 7s. in a column headed "Allowance for Special Duties":—Held: the 7s. a week formed no part of his "pay" for the purpose of calculating his pension.

If, therefore, the question were to be decided on the construction of the Act of Parliament alone, I should be of opinion that this payment of 7s. per week was extra pay, & was as truly part of the constable's pay at the time of his retirement within the meaning of the Act [Police Act] of 1890 [c. 45], as the ordinary pay of his class. But I think it was competent for the constable to contract himself out of the Act, & to agree that extra pay for any special duties should not be reckoned as part of his pay for the purpose of fixing the amount of his pension on retirement. This, I think, is what he has done by signing the weekly pay sheets in which his ordinary pay only is entered under the column entitled "Amount of Pay" (LORD DAVEY).—UPPERTON v. RIDLEY, [1903] A. 133. — From date of retirement.—Applt., a constable in a county police force, who was entitled to a pension on retirement, was one of certain constables as to whom resps., the standing joint committee of the county, on Dec. 31, 1918, resolved that they should "be permitted to retire on pension as soon as the chief constable can arrange for their services to be dispensed with." Applt. was stationed at Sharpness Docks, which were policed by the standing joint committee under an arrangement which was to end at 6 a.m., on Apr. 1, 1919. The chief constable informed applt. on Jan. 3, 1919, through his superior officers, that he would be pensioned on Apr. 1. On Mar. 20, the chief constable wrote to the superintendent of police that the pension would commence on Apr. 1. On Mar. 31 applt. reported for duty at 10 p.m., & with the sanction of his superior officer, patrolled the docks until 3 a.m. on Apr. 1, but the chief constable had not sanctioned any police duty on the part of applt. after Mar. 31. On Apr. 1 applt. went by train to the police headquarters with a police ticket & received a discharge dated Mar. 31 with pay up to that date. On Apr. 8 the chief constable manded the cheque & reversed their previous decision. In an action by the sons of deceased constable against the police authority defts. maintained that it was not the intention of the statute that a gratuity should be given to children above the age of fifteen years:—Held: defts. had acted within reported to resps. that he had allowed applt. to retire on Mar. 31. The chief constable was authorised to exercise resps. power under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 1, to fix the date of applt.'s retirement. Applt.'s pension was paid monthly at the rate in force on Mar. 31, & in accordance with Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), Sched. III., r. 11 (a), was calculated upon his pay at that date. In July, 1919, a parliamentary committee recommended an increase in police pay as from Apr. 1, 1919, & a reassessment of pensions in the case of men who had retired since that date. Resps. decided to make the increase of pay, & to reassess upon the new scale the pensions of constables who had retired since Mar. 31. No reassessment was made in applt.'s case, as resps. assumed that he had retired not after but on Mar. 31. Applt. then applied to resps. for an increased pension on the ground that he was serving on Apr. 1, 1919, but resps. refused the application:—Held: as applt. was employed as a constable on Apr. 1, 1919, that was the date of his retirement, & he was entitled to a pension on the increased scale.—*GREEN v. 134. — Effect of fresh appointment.—(1) A., head constable of the City of Liverpool, at a salary of £1,400 a year, resigned that appointment & accepted that of Commr. of Police of the City of London at £1,250 a year:—Held: the pension payable by the City of Liverpool should be, calculated under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 13 (2), at £850, being the difference between £1,250 (A.'s present salary) & £2,100 (one & a half times his salary at Liverpool).

(2) A resolution to suspend the payment of A.'s pension, purporting to have been passed under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 13 (1), by the city council of Liverpool, was held to be invalid, the watch committee being the police authority for Liverpool within the meaning of Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 13 (1).—*NOTT-BOWER v. (2) A certificate of "approved service" under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 4 (1), that is, of diligent & faithful service, must be under the order of the police authority.

142. Pension fund payable partly from police pension fund & partly from Parliamentary funds — Apportionment — Mandamus to Treasury.—A member of the Royal Irish Constabulary, which was a force with a salary paid out of money provided by Parliament, removed from that force with the written sanction of the chief officer thereof to the police force of a county in England. Upon his retirement from this latter force he became, under the Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), entitled to, & was granted by the police authority of the county, a pension calculated upon the number of years of his approved service in both forces. The police authority of the county applied to the Treasury, under Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 14, to determine the proportions in which the pension should be payable from money provided by Parliament & from the county police pension fund, but the Treasury refused to do so upon the ground that the Royal Irish Constabulary was not a "police force" within the definition in Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 33, as it was not maintained by any of the police authorities mentioned in Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), sched. III., & that therefore Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 14, did not apply. Upon an application by the police authority for a mandamus:—Held: as the Royal Irish Constabulary was the only police force in which the salaries of the members were paid out of money provided by Parliament, the context required that the expression "police force" in Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 14 (iii), should have its ordinary meaning, & not the limited meaning contained in the definition in Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 33, & therefore it included the Royal Irish Constabulary, & Police Act, 1890 (c. 45), s. 14, applied; & a mandamus would lie to the Treasury to determine the proportions in which the pension was payable mulation until sum reached certain amount.—In 1889 the police force of Hamilton established a benefit fund, to provide for a gratuity to any member resigning or being incapacitated from length of service or injury, & to the family of any member dying in the service. Each member of the force contributed a percentage of his pay for the purposes of the fund, & one of the rules provided as follows: "No money to be drawn from the fund for any purpose whatever until it reach the sum of eight thousand ($8,000) dollars":—Held: in case of a member of the force dying before the fund reached the said sum, the gratuity to his family was merely suspended, & was payable as soon as that amount was realised.—*MILLER v. ### SECT. 1.—THE MINISTRY OF HEALTH.

NOTE.—The administration of relief to the poor was subject to the management, direction and control of the Local Government Board in which body was vested the powers of the former Poor Law Commissioners and the Poor Law Board. These powers are now transferred to the Ministry of Health.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See, generally, Ministry of Health Act, 1919 (c. 21); Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), ss. 1, 211–220, 240–245.

1. Power of authority to make—Order altering constitution of union—Annexation of objecting town.]—(1) The Poor Law Comrs. having made a union of fourteen country parishes, by the consent of that union, added to it a considerable town adjacent; the town, disliking the annexation to the union, obtained a rule for a certiorari to bring up the order, but the rule was discharged on the ground that the Comrs. were authorised to make the order.

24. — Justices acting outside union district.]—The Durham union consists of the parishes & townships of the borough of Durham, & of several other parishes & townships in the county of Durham. Two justices, usually acting in and for the borough, made an order under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 27, for out-door relief to a pauper who resided within the borough:—Held: they were not justices "usually acting for the district in which the union was situate," & had no jurisdiction to make the order.—R. v. DURHAM UNION (1851), 4 New Sess. Cas. 437; 16 L. T. O. S. 363; 15 J. P. Jo. 51.

26. Disqualification—Receipt of salary from poor rate—Exceptions.]—The clerk to a highway board or a school board, whose salary is paid out of a district or school board fund, which is fed by moneys which are contributed by several parishes in accordance with precepts issued under the provisions of Highway Act, 1864 (c. 101), or the Elementary Education Act, 1870 (c. 75), is not disqualified, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1842 (c. 57), s. 14, as being a person receiving a fixed salary from the poor rates in any parish or union, from serving as a guardian in such parish or union.—R. v. RAWLINS, R. v. DIBBIN (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 382; 54 L. J. Q. B. 557; 50 J. P. 5, C. A. Annotation:—Reld. Greville-Smith v. Tomlin (1911), 104 L. T. 816.

28. — Interest in contract with guardians—Interest ceasing before office declared vacant.]—A member of a board of guardians agreed with the board to collect on their behalf rent receivable by the board in respect of a certain house. There was no express agreement as to any fee or commission to be paid to the member for so doing. He collected the rent until the house was sold, & then paid to the board the amount of the rent received by him, less a sum which he claimed to be entitled to retain as commission, but he subsequently paid to the board the sum which he had retained. After receiving it the board declared the member's office of guardian to be vacant, on the ground that, by reason of charging commission for the collection of the rent, he had become disqualified under Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 46 (1) (e), for being a member of the board:—Held: the fact that before the declaration of vacancy the employment had terminated, & the amount of commission had been paid by the member to the board, did not prevent him from being disqualified & the office was therefore, vacant.—R. v. ROWLANDS, [1906] 2 K. B. 292; 75 L. J. K. B. 501; 95 L. T. 502; 70 J. P. 463; sub nom. R. v. ROWLANDS, Ex p. WYNNE, 4 L. G. R. 983, D. C.

29. — Absence from meetings — Illness. — If a guardian or district councillor is absent from meetings of the board or council for more than six months consecutively through illness, it is not necessary for him to give notice of his illness to the board or council in order that he may not be disqualified under Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 46 (8):—Semble: if his absence is not due to illness he is disqualified from acting, at all events until his excuse has been considered & accepted by the board or council, & he cannot by merely resuming attendance afterwards do away with the disqualification.—R. v. HUNTON, Ex p. HODGSON (1911), 75 J. P. 335; 9 L. G. R. 751, D. C.

30. — Receipt of relief—By way of loan. — Relief which is given by way of loan only is relief within Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 46, & its receipt by way of loan acts as a disqualification as therein provided.—CHARD v. BUSH, [1923] 2 K. B. 849; 68 Sol. Jo. 104; 21 L. G. R. 601; sub nom. CHARD v. BUSH, WILLIAMS v. BUSH, 92 L. J. K. B. 1013; 130 L. T. 60; 87 J. P. 154; 39 T. L. R. 693; 27 Cox, C. C. 527, D. C.

31. — Relief in hospital—Cost repaid. — Appt., B., who was a local government elector in the area of the Dartford Union, moved the Div. Ct. for a rule nisi directed to the Dartford Guardians to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to declare vacant under Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 46 (1) (b), (7), the office of guardian held by P., on the ground that since her election as guardian, she had received "union or parochial relief." Since her election as guardian, P. was for some time a private patient in a hospital at Dartford maintained by the guardians. P. had, however, repaid to the guardians the cost of her maintenance at the hospital as well as the cost of the medical relief obtained by her while at the hospital. She had also paid the expenses of her conveyance to the hospital:—Held: as the guardians had been paid in full for every privilege & advantage which P. had received at the hospital, there was no evidence on which it could be said that she had been in receipt of "union or parochial relief," & therefore, she was not disqualified for being a guardian.—Ex p. BREWSTER (1927), 91 J. P. 103; 43 T. L. R. 253; 71 Sol. Jo. 123, C. A.

32. Meetings — Notice of meeting — Failure to notify one member. — To an action of trespass for an assault, defts. pleaded that they were overseers of the poor, & that a select vestry of the parish was duly assembled & holden in a certain school room within the parish, & that defts., as overseers, were present; that pltf. unlawfully entered the room, & defts. expelled him; it was proved that one of the five members who constituted the select vestry, had not been summoned, or received any previous notice of the meeting:—Held: the plea was not proved, as the meeting was not a legally constituted vestry so as to support the allegation, that the select vestry was duly assembled.—

DOBSON v. FUSSEY (1831), 7 Bing. 305; 2 Man. & Ry. M. C. 470; 5 Moo. & P. 112; 9 L. J. O. S. C. P. 72; 131 E. R. 117.

33. Whether board legally constituted — No election in one district of union. — Under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), ss. 26, 38, Poor Law Comrs. formed a union of six townships, comprehending T. & L., & ordered that there should be eighteen guardians of the union, two of whom were to be elected by L., & the other sixteen by the other townships, in specified proportions, there not being less than two for any one township. The first & two subsequent annual elections took place, at each of which more than six guardians were elected for the union; but L. elected none on any occasion:—Held: the board of guardians elected on the third election, though not eighteen in number, might, under sect. 38, make an order on the overseers of T. for payment of money conformably to the regulations issued for the union by the comrs.; & the overseers were compellable by mandamus to pay.—ROBINSON v. TODMORDEN UNION (1842), 3 Q. B. 675; 114 E. R. 665; sub nom. ROBINSON v. R., 2 Gal. & Dav. 820; sub nom. R. v. TODMORDEN & WALSDEN TOWNSHIPS OVERSEERS, 11 L. J. M. C. 129, Ex. Ch.

34. Election of guardians—Administration under board of directors. — The Poor Law Comrs. have no powers under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 39, to make an order for the election of a board of guardians in a parish where the administration of the poor laws is already in the hands of a board of directors, under a local Act.—*R. v. For payment of these services pltf. claimed the sum of £596 11s., of which the sum of £585 was for services rendered up to Jan. 2, 1870, & the remaining sum of £11 11s. was for services rendered after that date, & on Dec. 24, 1870, brought an action to recover the same. Defts. admitted the latter claim, but denied their liability to pay the former on the ground that such claim was barred by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1, which enacts "with respect to any debt, claim or demand, which may after the passing of this Act, be lawfully incurred by or become due from the guardians of any union parish, or the board of management of any school or asylum district, such debt, claim, or demand shall be paid within the half-year in which the same shall have been incurred or become due, or within three months after the expiration of such half-year, but not afterwards, the commencement of such half-year to be reckoned from the time when the last half-year's accounts shall or ought to have been closed":—Held: the claim of pltf. to the sum of £585 was barred by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1.—*CASTLE v. 41. ———.]—The guardians of F. entered into a contract with S., a builder, for certain works required by them for the purpose of carrying out their public duties. The works were completed on May 3, 1901, & paid for in Sept. of that year. S. then claimed an additional sum by way of damages for loss alleged to have been caused by negligence & frequent changes of plans on the part of defts. The contract contained an arbn. clause, & pltf.'s claim was referred to arbn. in Nov. 1902. Defts. took two preliminary objections:—(a) that the claim was for neglect or default in the execution of defts.' public duty, & proceedings had not been commenced within six months as required by Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61); & (b) that the amount claimed became due, if at all, on or before May 3, 1901, & by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), could only be paid within the half-year commencing Mar. 30, 1901, or within three months afterwards. This action was brought for the determination of these two points of law:—Held: the sum, if any, owing to pltf. did not become due within Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), until the amount was ascertained by arbn. according to the contract.—*SHARPINGTON v. 45. ———.]—Damages.—Defts., as the owners & occupiers of a workhouse, had entered into an agreement with the water co. for the supply by meter of water to the workhouse at a rate varying with the quantity consumed, according to the co.'s scale of charges, & water was so supplied for the workhouse for several years, when defts. requested the co. to remove the meter & furnish a supply for domestic purposes at rates based on annual value. The co. refused to do so, & the water was supplied by meter to & used by defts. as before, but for several years no payment had been made for it, defts. refusing to pay except on the basis of a domestic supply. It was admitted that some at least of the purposes for which the water was supplied were non-domestic purposes, & of these some were found as a fact to be trade or business purposes:—Held: with regard to a claim for damages for wasting the water supplied, but not paid for, which had been amended at the hearing & treated as a claim for water supplied at the former rate, plffs. were precluded by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1, from recovering all such rates as had not become due within the previous six months, & by sect. 4, from recovering the last quarter's rate, as, until the claim was amended, the action was not a "proceeding" within sect. 4.—CHESTER WATERWORKS CO. v. Application to tax costs.—(1) The Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1, enacts that "any debt, claim or demand lawfully incurred or become due" from the guardians of any union shall be paid within the half-year in which same shall have been incurred or become due, or within three months after the expiration of such half-year, but not afterwards. Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 4, provides that if any person claiming any debt or demand shall "commence proceedings in any ct. of law or equity, or before any justice or other competent authority" within the time thereinbefore limited, & shall with due diligence prosecute such proceedings to judgment or other final settlement of the question, such judgment shall be satisfied by the guardians, notwithstanding that such judgment may be recovered or such final settlement arrived at after the expiration of the period thereinbefore provided.

An appeal to quarter sessions against an assessment to the poor rate having been allowed with costs, appts. within the three months limited by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 1, applied to the clerk of the peace to tax the costs. The costs were taxed after the expiration of three months, & no proceedings to enforce payment of the taxed amount were commenced by appts. within the three months after the expiration of the half-year in which the costs were taxed:—Held: the application to tax was not a commencement of proceedings within Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), s. 4, & appts. could not recover the costs.

48. — Delay in instituting proceedings—Prosecution "with due diligence."—An action was brought by an engineer, within the time limited by Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49), for services rendered to defts., who were a rural sanitary authority acting under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55). After issue joined pltf. took out a summons to refer the matter to arbn.; this summons was opposed by defts., & was dismissed. Pltf. then allowed two assizes at Leeds, where the action was to be tried, to pass without giving notice of trial; defts. then took out a summons to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, after which pltf. gave notice of trial for the assizes then coming on. At the trial, the judge, with the consent of the parties, ordered the matter to be referred to an arbitrator who found for pltf. for a certain sum. In an action for a mandamus to defts. to levy a rate to satisfy the award:—Held: granting the mandamus, as the action was a proper one to be referred to arbn., & as pltf. had taken out a summons to refer, which defts. opposed, pltf. had not, under the circumstances, failed to prosecute the proceedings in the action "with due diligence" within Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (c. 49).—RHODES v. By Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1844 (c. 101), the comrs. are for the first time empowered to direct that schools shall be built in parochial districts:—Held: a contract made by the directors & guardians, by order of the Poor Law Comrs., in relation to the erection of an industrial school within the parish, was not a contract for "a thing to be done in pursuance of the local Act," & therefore was not required by sect. 220 of that Act to be in writing.—*ARMSTRONG v. 54. — Guardian not having acted as such.]—By a local Act, for regulating the affairs of a parish, the churchwardens & overseers for the time being were directed to meet annually at Easter, to nominate & appoint twenty discreet vestrymen, who, together with the churchwardens & overseers, were to be, & be called governors & directors of the poor. By a subsequent Act, the same mode of nominating & appointing twenty discreet vestrymen was to be adopted, & it was further enacted that they together with the churchwardens & overseers & all persons seised of land, etc., within the parish, of the annual value of £80, shall be, & be called governors & directors of the poor; & by another Act, reciting the previous acts, it was enacted, that the churchwardens & overseers, & thirty-two vestrymen by name, & their successors to be nominated & appointed in the manner directed by the recited Acts, should be the governors & directors:—Held: this latter Act virtually repealed the former Acts; & a governor & director by estate, within the local Act who supplied the poor of the parish with provisions, was not liable to the penalties of Poor Relief Act, 1815 (c. 137), s. 6.—*STANLEY v. 63. Contribution towards expenses—Child in hospital for infectious diseases.]—Certain pauper children chargeable to the guardians of the C. Union were, under the provisions of the Poor Law Certified Schools Act, 1862 (c. 43), sent to a school situated in the urban district of T. An outbreak of fever having occurred at the school some of the children were taken to a hospital provided by the B. & D. Joint Hospital Board, constituted by provisional order under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 279. The children were so taken at the instance of the medical adviser to the school, who was also the medical officer of health for the T. district; the authority of the guardians of the C. Union was not obtained for the removal of the children to the hospital. The urban district of T. was one of the constituent districts of the B. & D. Joint Hospital Board; the C. Union was outside such constituent districts. Upon an action by the B. & D. Joint Hospital Board against the guardians of the C. Union to recover the expenses of maintenance of the pauper children in the hospital:—Held: (1) plffs. could not recover under any statutory provisions; (2) there was, in fact, no promise by the superintendent of the school to repay the expenses of maintenance of the children in the hospital, & moreover, the superintendent had no authority to pledge the credit of defts. to any expense outside the school; (3) there was no such urgency as to create an implied request by defts. to plffs. to maintain the children in the hospital:—Seemle: even if the case had been one of urgency plffs. would not have been entitled to recover.—*BURY & DISTRICT JOINT HOSPITAL BOARD v. 68. Power of authority—To direct appointment of officers.—Where several parishes have been united for the purpose of the relief & employment of the poor, the Poor Law Comrs. have no authority, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 46, to direct the guardians of the union to appoint a collector of the rates in any one of the parishes forming the union.—*R. v. 69. — Actual appointment vested in guardians.—In a poor law union formed under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, the Comrs. under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), may, by sect. 46, direct the appointment of an auditor for the union, to audit the accounts of the incorporation & of its several parishes at proper periods; to examine into the expenditure & allow or disallow charges; & to see that the accounts are properly stated & supported by vouchers, & all sums received, or which ought to have been received, brought into account; with power, in case the accuracy of any account shall be doubted, to compel the appearance of persons & production of documents. They may also appoint a clerk, with a salary, to attend meetings of the guardians, keep minutes of their proceedings, conduct their correspondence, communicate orders from the Comrs. & guardians to the persons administering relief within the union, give instructions for executing such report neglects, etc.; & to keep a book of moneys received & paid, orders & cheques given, accounts passed, & salaries ordered to be paid, by the board of guardians; to make up & balance the union accounts, & abstract them quarterly, etc.; to assist the auditor in making a quarterly abstract of the accounts of each parish; & to revise the accounts of the master of the poor-house. But they cannot direct that such clerk shall, as a part of his duties, “prepare or superintend the preparation, & take measures for ensuring the prompt & correct return, of all such statistical information & reports as may be required for the public service”; & an order for the govt. of an incorporation, containing such a clause, is altogether void.—*R. v. who performed executive duties under the vestrymen, & subject to rules of govt. which the Act empowered the vestrymen to make. The directors were by the same Act to exercise all the powers, as to the poor, which might be exercised by churchwardens & overseers. The vestrymen were authorised to appoint a governor of the workhouse, & such other officers as they should think fit, with salaries, & from time to time to remove such officers & appoint others in their places. The Poor Law Comrs., acting under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), made an order, requiring, among other things, by art. 66, that the vestrymen of the above district should, whenever it should be requisite, or there should be a vacancy, appoint persons to certain enumerated offices, including that of master of the workhouse, & also such assistants & servants as they or the directors, with the consent of the comrs., might deem necessary for the efficient performance of the duties; & by art. 67, that the officers so appointed should respectively perform such duties as might be required of them by the rules of the poor law board, & such other duties, conformable to the nature of their offices, as the vestry or the directors might lawfully require of them; & providing, by art. 88, that the directors might at their discretion suspend any of the above named officers, reporting the cause of such suspension to the Comrs., who might thereupon remove it:—Held: on motion for a certiorari, the Comrs. had, in arts. 66 & 88, exceeded their authority by unduly transferring powers from the vestrymen to the directors. Certiorari granted.—Re ST. W. were required to nominate twenty-one persons who should become the directors of the poor, & who were to make rules & regulations for the maintaining of the poor, & which were to be subsequently confirmed by the vestry. In pursuance of this sect., in 1763, the vestry nominated twenty-one persons directors, by whom certain rules were made, which, among other things, appointed that the officers should be elected annually at Easter. These rules were duly confirmed, & have never since been repealed. By an order, bearing date July 19, 1850, & addressed to the vestrymen of the said parish, the poor law board directed, among other things, by art. 67, that the directors, whenever a vacancy occurred, should appoint fit persons to fill certain offices, & art. 83 that every officer appointed to or holding any office under the order should continue to hold the same until he die, resign, or be removed by the poor law board, or be proved to be insane to the satisfaction of the board:—Held: these arts. did not exceed the powers conferred by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 46, on the poor law board, & the order was, therefore, valid.—*R. v. J. suggested, as a ground for the rule, that several of the guardians whose votes gave R. the majority were themselves not duly elected. Assuming that the ct. would grant a mandamus to admit to this office:—Held: they would not grant it for the purpose of scrutinising the elections of guardians who had voted; & if this inquiry were open, the ct. could not grant the writ, since it did not appear who were the proper persons to make a return; & if the guardians de facto might make it, they might also appoint a clerk.

99. Liability of guardians for torts of officers—Negligence in performance of statutory duty—Common employment.]—The employment of a pauper set to work by the guardians of the poor under the powers given to them by the Poor Law Acts & Orders is not contractual, but statutory, & therefore the defence of common employment is no answer to an action by a pauper so employed against the guardians to recover damages for injury suffered in such employment through the negligence of an officer of the guardians. But the setting the paupers to work is part of the administrative duties imposed on the guardians by statute, & an action by the pauper against the guardians for negligence of their officer in discharge of these duties will not lie.—*TOZELAND v. 100. "Officer or servant in the service or employment" of guardians—Public vaccinator not included.]—A public vaccinator appointed by a board of guardians under the Vaccination Acts is not "an officer or servant in the service or employment" of the guardians within the meaning of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), but is a contractor who has contracted with them for the performance of certain work for certain fees. A district medical officer who is also a public vaccinator is not entitled to bring in his fees for vaccinations as part of the "salary & emoluments" upon which the superannuation allowance to which he is entitled under that Act is calculated.—LAWSON v. MARLBOROUGH UNION, [1912] 2 Ch. 154; 81 L. J. Ch. 525; 106 L. T. 838; 76 J. P. 305; 28 T. L. R. 404; 56 Sol. Jo. 503; 10 L. G. R. 443.

102. Right of superannuation—Loss of—"Grave misconduct."]—(1) By Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 7, an officer or servant in the service or employment of the guardians of a union who ceases to hold office "in consequence of any offence of a fraudulent character or of grave misconduct" shall forfeit all claims to any superannuation allowance under the Act in respect of his previous service:—Held: the words "grave misconduct" are not limited by the previous words "any offence of a fraudulent character" so as to be confined to grave misconduct of a fraudulent character, but in order to constitute "grave misconduct" the misconduct must be of a higher standard than that which would justify an employer in dismissing his servant & must be of a very serious character.

(2) Pltf. was employed by defts. as (inter alia) relieving officer & collector. For several years he had been in the habit of using money received by him as defts.' collector for his own purposes, instead of paying it into their account, & with the aid of his salary, had paid quarterly to defts.' account the amount of the money so used by him. Upon being told that the practice must cease he nevertheless continued it, & in particular he did not pay into the guardians' account until June 5, 1912, a sum of money he had collected in Apr. 1912, & then only by the aid of money he borrowed for the purpose. A sum of money which he had collected during June, 1912, ought to have been paid into the guardians account on or before July 4, 1912, but pltf. failed to make this payment. He also debited defts. in his books with the sum of 3s. a week for thirteen weeks for relief to a man who was in fact dead; & he debited defts. with a sum of 8s. due to the overseer of another union, but did not in fact pay the 8s. until about nine months later. There was no suggestion of fraud against pltf., who resigned his office in consequence of these irregularities:—Held: although pltf. had not committed any offence of a fraudulent character he had been guilty of "grave misconduct" within Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, (c. 50), s. 7, & was therefore not entitled to any superannuation allowance under the Act in respect of his previous service in the offices of relieving officer & collector.—POAD v. SCARBOROUGH UNION, [1914] 3 K. B. 959; 84 L. J. K. B. 209; 111 L. T. 491; 78 J. P. 465; 12 L. G. R. 1044, C. A.

103. —Computation of service—"Served for not less than twenty years"—Meaning of.]—For the purpose of computing the service entitling the holder of a joint appointment on its vacation to a superannuation allowance under the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), the words "served for not less than twenty years" in the proviso to sect. 8 refer to the aggregate service of the officer or servant under any union in which he has served & not only to service under the particular union in which the joint appointment was made.—PRICE v. EASTBOURNE UNION, [1920] 1 Ch. 535; 89 L. J. Ch. 152; 122 L. T. 521; 18 L. G. R. 81.

104. Reference to authority—Question arising between guardians & officer—As to amount of superannuation allowance.]—Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 3, regulates the scale of superannuation allowances under the Act, & these are to be based on the amount of salary, wages, or emoluments during the five years immediately preceding the day on which an officer or servant ceases to hold the office or employment. Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 12, provides for contributions by officers & servants in the employment of the guardians of a union for the purposes of the Act.

By Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 18, the Local Government Board [now the Ministry of Health] may, if they think fit, determine any question which may arise between guardians . . . & any officer or servant, & which may be referred to them by either party, as to the right to or the amount of superannuation allowance of such officer or servant, & the decision of the Local Government Board shall be binding & conclusive. Under Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50), s. 18, a question as to the value of the emoluments of a master & matron of schools under the control of the guardians of a union, on which depended their superannuation allowances, was rightly referred to the Minister of Health; & where the guardians had refused an application to ante date an increased valuation of their emoluments, on which depended their superannuation allowance, the Minister had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.—*R. v. 105. No power to contract out of superannuation provisions—In guardians or officers.]—A compulsory scheme for providing superannuation pensions for poor law officers & servants was established by the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (c. 50). Obligatory pensions were payable by the guardians & obligatory contributions by the officers & servants.

The pensions were expressly made inalienable, but there was no express provision against contracting out:—Held: it was not open either to the guardians or to their officers or servants to contract themselves out of the statutory obligations & rights respectively imposed or conferred upon them by the Act.—*SALFORD UNION v. 106. Order by guardians to collect contribution—Defects in order constituting union—Order valid till quashed.]—The Poor Law Comrs. in 1837, by an order, directed nine parishes, townships & places, to be formed into a union, to be called the Pateley Bridge Union, for the administration of the law for the relief of the poor.

In the margin of the order were enumerated eleven townships & the Comrs. ordered that a board should be constituted according to Poor Law (Amendment) Act, fourteen to be the number of guardians, three for Bewerley, two for Dacre, etc., treating them as separate townships. They then directed them to contribute to a common fund, for the purpose of providing a workhouse, etc., & afterwards fixed the proportions payable by each township or place. In 1848, the chairman & guardian of the union made an order on pltf. & three others, as overseers of the parish of Dacre-cum-Bewerley, treating the two as one township, for payment of £500 by way of contribution towards the relief of the poor, etc. This order having been disobeyed, defts., who were magistrates, issued their summons to pltf. & the other overseers, as overseers of Dacre-cum-Bewerley, & afterwards issued a warrant of distress, under which pltf.'s goods were taken. In an action of trespass against defts. for a seizure of pltf.'s goods under this warrant:—Held: (1) Poor Rate Act, 1839 (c. 84), s. 1, gave to the magistrates a power similar to that exercised by them in enforcing a legal poor-rate; but in the absence of a legal obligation to pay the contribution by the party whose goods had been seized, the magistrates had acted without jurisdiction & were liable; (2) if they acted under such circumstances, they were liable in an action of trespass, & justices Protection Act, 1847 (c. 44), which, in certain cases, makes a magistrate liable in an action on the case only, did not apply; (3) although the order of the Comrs. would have been wrong in ordering three guardians to be elected for Bewerley, & two for Dacre, instead of five for the entire township, if those places constituted one township, still the defects in the order were cured by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 105, & the order was valid ad interim; & the acts of the guardians were valid.—*NEWBOULD v. 109. Charges on common fund—Extra-parochial district added to union—District liable to maintain own poor.]—An extra-parochial place was, by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 48, made liable to maintain its own poor, & afterwards comprised in W. union. Certain paupers had lived all their lives in that place, & as far as was known, neither they nor their ancestors had any settlement elsewhere:—Held: as these paupers were irremovable, because there was no place to which they could be removed, & not by reason of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), the charges of relief must be borne by the place itself, & were not cast on the common fund of the union by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1848 (c. 110), s. 3.—R. v. EAST DEAN OVERSEERS (1854), 22 L. T. O. S. 258.

110. — Pauper irremovable by having no known settlement.]—Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1848 (c. 110), s. 3, is inapplicable to the case of a pauper who is irremovable by his having no known settlement, although he has resided without interruption for five years, so as to be irremovable if settled elsewhere.—R. v. BENNETT (1854), 3 E. & B. 341; 2 C. L. R. 977; 23 L. J. M. C. 39; 18 J. P. 217; 18 Jur. 311; 118 E. R. 1169.

gain a settlement there, nor was his place of settlement known, was properly chargeable to the common fund of the union in which the parish is situate.—R. v. SEGRAM (1857), 6 W. R. 74.

112. ———.] — Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1848 (c. 110), s. 3, is applicable to the case of a pauper whose settlement is not known, it not being known that he has no settlement, & who has resided without interruption for five years in a parish in a union, so that, if his settlement were found to be elsewhere, he would still not be removable.—Re BEDMINSTER UNION (1857), 8 E. & B. 573; 120 E. 113. — Removal of pauper to another parish in same union.]—Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, does not operate so as to affect the relations of parishes which are in the same union.

M. who had resided for forty years in S., his parish of settlement, moved into the parish of P. in the same union, & there resided for a period of less than three years, when he there became a pauper:—Held: M. was removable from P. to S. & he was chargeable to S., & not to the common fund of the union.—GREAT SALKELD (CHURCHWARDENS & OVERSEERS) v. PLUMPTON WALL (OVERSEERS) (1864), 4 New Rep. 237.

114. Validity of order for contribution—Balance standing to credit of parish—Embezzlement of balance.]—The guardians of the London Union made a contribution order pursuant to art. 82 of the Consolidated Order of the Poor Law Comrs., 1837; but the clerk, in preparing it, disregarded the terms of art. 81, inasmuch as, in computing the sum for which the parish of St. M. B. was to be ordered to contribute to the expenses of the union, he omitted to estimate "the probable balance due to that parish"; for, if he had taken that balance into account, it was so largely in its favour that no sum whatever would have been needed to meet the cost of the maintenance of its poor, & the other charges for which the order was made. The reason for this omission was, that the balances in favour of that & several other parishes in the hands of the treasurer of the union had been fraudulently appropriated by an officer of the union who was employed to collect the rates for certain of the parishes forming the union, of which the parish of St. M. B. was not one:—Held: as the guardians might by taking the proper steps, either by orders apportioning the amount of the loss amongst the various parishes of the union, or by orders apportioning it exclusively amongst those parishes for which the defaulting officer was collector, realise the balance due to the parish of St. M. B., they had no right to treat it as non existing, & consequently, the order was illegally made, & could not be enforced.—HALE v. CITY OF LONDON UNION (1859), 6 C. B. N. S. 863; 29 L. J. M. 118. Sums overpaid under precepts—Successful appeal against valuation list—Adjustment of sums overpaid.]—The guardians of a union claimed & received sums from the overseers of a township under precepts based upon the then existing valuation list. It was subsequently decided, on an appeal against a rate by colliery owners who represented two-thirds of the township, that the valuation list was too high. The overseers did not appeal against the valuation list under Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862 (c. 103), s. 32, but, having refunded the amount overpaid by the colliery owners, claimed credit for the excess paid by them to the guardians:—Held: (1) the guardians might give credit for the sums overpaid by the overseers, even though the latter had not appealed against the valuation list; (2) justices might refuse to enforce by distress warrant the guardians' precept for a general rate based on the old valuation list when it appeared that such sums had already been paid in excess by the overseers.—*TYNEMOUTH UNION v. 119. Liability to contribute to common fund—Extra parochial district added to union.]—By an order, pursuant to Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (c. 19), s. 1, two justices of the peace for Middlesex appointed an overseer for the parish of Staple Inn, theretofore extra-parochial; & afterwards the Poor Law Comrs., by order under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 32, & Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (c. 19), s. 1, annexed the parish of Staple Inn to the Holborn Union. By Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 9, parishes comprised in any Union under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), are to contribute to the common fund thereof, in proportion to the annual ratable value of the lands, tenements, etc., therein assessable to the poor rate in force for the time being, whether such lands, etc., be actually rated or not. Before Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), no property in Staple Inn had ever been assessed to a poor rate; but an order for it to contribute had been made since the passing of that Act:—Held: Staple Inn was rightly annexed to the Union, pursuant to Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 32, & Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (c. 19), s. 1; & having become a parish comprised within a Union previous to Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), it was under the latter Act liable to contribute to the common fund of the Union.—STAPLE INN OVERSEERS v. HOLBORN UNION (1868), 2 H. & C. 284; 2 New Rep. 331; 32 L. J. M. C. 181; 8 L. T. 464; 27 J. P. 695; 9 Jur. N. S. 652; 11 W. R. 838; 159 E. R. 119.

120. ——— District having no poor.—N. an extra-parochial place having become a parish, & by an order of the Poor Law Board added to a union, a contribution order was made by the guardians of the union upon C., the overseer. Upon his refusal to pay, the guardians applied to justices for a summons under Poor Rate Act, 1839 (c. 84), s. 1, which empowers them, if they "shall think fit," to issue their warrant for levying the amount. At the hearing, the only ground which C. urged against the issuing of the warrant was, that, as the parish of N. had not at that time any paupers chargeable to it, it was unjust & unreasonable that the ratepayers thereof should be called upon to pay anything towards the expenses of the union. The justices refused to issue their warrant, adding that they did so in the exercise of their discretion. Upon application under Justices Protection Act, 1848 (c. 44), s. 5, for a rule on the justices to issue their warrant, this ct. made it absolute, with costs.—R. v. 121. Amount of contribution—Assessed on annual ratable value of lands—Power of auditor to assess.—The guardians of a union formed under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), had agreed, in pursuance of sect. 33, that for the purposes of settlement the parishes should be considered as one parish. After the passing of Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), the poor law auditor allowed accounts of the union, in which the proportion of the contributions to be paid by each parish to the common fund was ascertained in the manner provided by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76):—Held: Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 9, applies to unions under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 33, & therefore the contributions of the parishes ought to be according to the annual ratable value of the lands, etc.; the auditor had power to ascertain & assess the share of the common charges to be borne by the parishes in the union.—R. v. The H. union sought to recover the value of the land out of the Metropolitan common poor fund in the half year ending Michaelmas 1903:—Held: this sum could not be recovered in one half year, & rules nisi, directed to the auditor who had disallowed the item, for a certiorari to quash the disallowance, & for a mandamus to grant a certificate of allowance, accordingly quashed.

123. Appeal against overseers' accounts—Form of notice.—(1) A notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, stated that applt. objected to certain specified payments alleged in the accounts, to have been made to persons specified by name in the notice:—Held: the notice was bad because it did not state the cause & ground of appeal as required by 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 4.

(2) The attorneys, some days before the appeal was tried, agreed to admit on the trial of the appeal, that the sums objected to were paid to the persons to whom it was alleged in the accounts that they were paid:—Held: this was not any waiver of the irregularity in the notice because the consent of the attorneys was not signified in open ct.—R. v. 126. ———— Costs of litigation.—Overseers' accounts being allowed, & an appeal against them dismissed, the allowance & order of sessions were brought up by certiorari, & an item appeared to be for the expenses of defending an appeal against overseers' accounts. The ct. quashed the allowance & order, such an item being bad on the face of it, inasmuch as no supposable facts could justify it.—R. v. 127. ———— Unnecessary & improper litigation.—One of the partners in a firm, acting as attorneys for a parish, was duly appointed auditor of the union comprising that parish, & acted as such until, on the passing of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, he became auditor of the district comprising that parish. It was known that he was a partner in the firm; & for some time no objection was made to his acting as auditor, though in doing so he had to allow or disallow bills of costs of his own firm. The objection was at last taken. The auditor, after an unsuccessful attempt to have the audit, as to these bills, conducted by a stranger, which the Poor Law Comrs. would not sanction, held an audit himself, though with the assistance of a disinterested party; that party, however, not acting formally as assessor. The auditor, during such audit, allowed several bills of costs belonging to his own firm. The accounts & allowances being brought up by certiorari: on a motion to quash them:—Held: (1) the auditor, being duly appointed & having accepted the office, was bound to fulfil its duties, & therefore the audit was not void, though the auditor had a direct interest in the accounts.

Amongst the items allowed were the costs of a litigation, in support of rates irregularly made, which, in the opinion of the ct., was unnecessary & improper, though the litigation was bond fide, carried on under the advice of counsel, & sanctioned by the vestry:—Held: (2) these items ought not to have been allowed; & the auditor's allowance of them was quashed.—*R. v. 128. Power of auditor to call for accounts—Auditor auditing accounts of parish composing union—Parish having accounted to own auditor.—

—(1) The Poor Law Comrs. caused an auditor to be appointed under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 46, to audit the accounts of a union & the several parishes therein, to examine whether the expenditure was lawful, to strike out payments & charges not authorised by some provision of the law, or order of the comrs., & to see that the accounts were properly stated, with vouchers. A district within the union had already auditors under a local Act which provided for the maintenance of the poor & regulation of the nightly watch. Their duty under the Act was, to audit the accounts of the directors of the poor, which the directors were required to produce, with vouchers: no power of disallowing items was given to the auditors; but it was enacted that, if they disapproved of any part of the accounts, it should be lawful for them to appeal to quarter sessions, entering into recognisance to pay costs if awarded against them: & the sessions were empowered to award costs to applt. or the party appealed against:—Held: the directors, though they had accounted to their own auditors according to the local Act, were not thereby exempted from accounting to the union auditor under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 47.

(2) The officers accounting for the receipt & expenditure of the poor rate to an auditor appointed by direction of the Poor Law Comrs. must account for all sums collected under the denomination of poor rate, & expended for any purposes (as watching, police, etc.) to which, by local or general Acts, the poor rate is applicable; not for those sums only which are raised & laid out strictly for the relief & management of the poor.—*R. v. 131. Surcharge by auditor—Costs paid by directors under local Act.—By a local & personal Act provision was made for electing governors & directors for the relief of the poor & for the watching & lighting of a district, consisting of one parish & part of another; & the governors & directors were empowered to elect auditors for the purpose of auditing the accounts of the district. The governors & directors were empowered to make rules for the application of moneys to be raised under the Act; to bring or defend actions affecting the property vested in them under the Act, or relating to the due execution of the Act; & to meet & ascertain the amount necessary to be assessed for the purposes of the Act, which amount the inhabitants were to raise by rate. The governors & directors were also empowered to appoint a clerk, & to make such allowance to him & their other officers as they should think proper. Auditors were also to be elected by the inhabitants, who were to meet half yearly, at least, & were empowered to appeal against any part of the accounts of which they should disapprove. After the passing of this Act, the Poor Law Comrs. included the district within one of several unions comprised in the N. W. M. district, for which last district they appointed an auditor under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 32. The last-mentioned auditor disallowed part of a bill of costs, paid by the governors & directors to their clerk, & surcharged three of the governors & directors with the amount disallowed:—Held: he had power so to disallow & surcharge, notwithstanding the provisions of the local Act.—R. v. TYRWHITT (1853), 2 E. & B. 77; 1 C. L. R. 551; 21 L. T. O. S. 113; 17 J. P. 678; 17 Jur. 893; 1 W. R. 327; 118 E. R. 697.

132. — Distress warrant to enforce payment—Jurisdiction of justices.—When a relieving officer is surcharged by the auditor of an audit district, & application is made to justices to issue a distress warrant, if the statutable proof of the surcharge be complete, the justices have no power to inquire into the grounds of the surcharge, but must issue the warrant. If they refuse to do so, the ct. will compel them by a rule or a mandamus.—R. v. LINFORD (1857), 7 E. & B. 950; 119 E. R. 1500.

Pltf. applied, as required by that sect. to the justices for a distress warrant, but as the overseer had by that time paid part of the certified deficiency, the justices declined to issue a warrant, for more than the unpaid part. Pltf. refused to accept this, & applied without success to this ct. for a mandamus. Upon appeal by the overseer, the Local Government Board under Poor Law Audit Act, 1848 (c. 91), s. 4, consented to remit the disallowance on condition that the overseer would pay pltf.'s costs incurred before the justices & this ct. Pltf. having failed to obtain the performance of this condition by the overseer, brought this action for his costs against defts.:—Held: under the circumstances defts.' were liable. —*PRIEST v. 134. — Grounds for surcharge — Payment amounting to improper conduct.]—In calculating the superannuation allowance to a registrar of births & deaths guardians took into account certain gratuities paid to him by them, as being "emoluments." These gratuities had been paid on the suggestion of & were approved by the Minister of Health, to supplement the registrar's statutory income. The district auditor disallowed the portion of the superannuation allowance based on these gratuities & surcharged it, on the ground that there was no legal warrant for the gratuities & that the sanction of the Minister of Health could not legalise their payment, & that they could not, therefore, form part of the basis of the calculation of the superannuation allowance:—Held: (1) as the only grounds upon which the above payment of superannuation allowance could be surcharged was that its payment amounted to improper conduct or was an illegal payment, & that it was neither, the surcharge was wrong; (2) the auditor had no power to disallow the portion of the superannuation allowance based upon said payment of gratuities. —*R. v. 139. Disallowance of items in accounts—Grounds for disallowance—Inexpedient or malâ fide payments.]—The overseers of a parish, at a vestry meeting held for the purpose, assessed a railway co. at £2,708. The co. gave notice of appeal. At a subsequent vestry it was decided that the assessment should be reduced to £2,000 & that, if the co. refused that compromise, the overseers should take such proceedings as they might be advised were necessary. The co. appealed; & the then overseers, without calling a vestry meeting, contested the appeal. The sessions reduced the rate to £300, subject to a case for the Q. B. The case was not sent up, the overseers having arranged with the co. that the rate should be fixed at £150. The Poor Law auditor disallowed the expenses of contesting the appeal, on two grounds: (a) that the overseers should have called a vestry meeting to determine whether the appeal should be contested; (b) that they should, after the decision at sessions, have summoned a vestry to determine whether the case for the Q. B. should be proceeded on. The expenses in question were after the audit, sanctioned by the inhabitants at a vestry meeting:—Held: the overseers were not bound to summon a vestry meeting before contesting the appeal or abandoning the case reserved; & as the auditor did not allege that what they had done was inexpedient or that they had acted malâ fide, the grounds of disallowance were bad. —R. v. STREET (1852), 18 Q. B. 682; 22 L. J. M. C. 29; 19 L. T. O. S. 165; 10 J. P. 359; 16 Jur. 1085; 118 E. R. 258.

140. — Whether auditor must alter balance with own hand—Or provide for disallowed item.]—(1) Certain surplus moneys belonging to some of the parishes of the L. union then in the hands of the union were stolen. The guardians of the union applied part of their general funds to restore these balances to the credit of the parishes to which they belonged, & then debited the whole of the parishes of the union with the deficiency under the head of common charges. The auditor having disallowed this item:—Held: the auditor was right in disallowing the item, for it was in effect throwing the loss which originally fell on a few parishes upon the whole of the parishes of the union.

(2) Semble: where a Poor Law auditor disallows an item in the accounts, & directs it to be expunged, he is not bound to alter the balance with his own hand; nor is he bound to state what is to be done with, or who else is to be debited with the disallowed item. —*R. v. 145. —.]—H. lived ten years in the Forest of Dean, & then died, & left several children: two justices made an order to remove them to Linton in Herefordshire. If a place be a reputed parish, & have churchwardens & overseers of the poor, it is within Poor Relief Act, 1801 (c. 2), though in truth it be no parish; but if it be merely extra-parochial, as the justices cannot send to such a place, so they cannot send from it: as it is exempt from receiving, so it shall not have the benefit of removing, for they have not proper persons to complain. Persons in extra-parochial places must subsist on private charity, as all persons did at common law before Poor Relief Act, 1801 (c. 2), which enacts, that every parish shall keep their own poor; in consequence of which the jurisdiction of removals was first set up before Poor Relief Act, 1866 (c. 12). For, unless the poor were removed to their own parishes, every parish could not maintain their own poor. But Poor Relief Act, 1801 (c. 2), does not extend to extraparochial places.—FOREST OF DEAN (INHABITANTS) v. LINTON (PARISH) (1700), 2 Salk. 487; 91 E. R. 419.

146. —.]—The parish of Pershore, is divided into six parts; five consist of distinct chapelries, which have separate chapels, & have, as far as can be ascertained, maintained their own poor. The other part is subdivided into the town of Pershore, & the hamlet of Pensham; the extent of the whole being 1,300 acres, the population about 1,100. Pensham has its own constable, collects its own highway & county rates. It has no chapel, but supplies one of the churchwardens to the mother church in Pershore. One poor rate has been made for the whole, & for a great many years there has been one overseer for Pensham, who has collected one-third of that rate from the hamlet, & paid it over to the joint fund, out of which the poor have been maintained indiscriminately:—Held: Pensham was not a separate district, & did not appear to be unable to receive the benefit of Poor Relief Act, 1801 (c. 2), & therefore, an appointment of overseers for it separately, was bad.—*R. v. They had the same parish church & churchwardens; but separate overseers, collectors, & other officers; & the rate for the maintenance of the poor was separately levied, in the proportions of two-thirds for one division & one-third for the other:—Held: the fact of joint maintenance of the poor was conclusive, under these circumstances, to show that P. was not a separate & distinct township for the maintenance of the poor, within Poor Relief Act, 1802 (c. 12); & the township of P., jointly with the parish, could have the benefit of Poor Relief Act, 1801 (c. 2).—*PRICE v. An agreement of that date was lately found in a chest of a large owner of N., agreed to maintain their own poor, & reciting that N. was in the parish of T. A rate having been made by the parish of T., on the inhabitants of N.:—Held: the agreement came from proper custody & was admissible; if N. had been entered in the registrar general's report in the last census as extra-parochial, that would have been conclusive under the Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857 (c. 19), s. 1; but as it was entered "T. with N." & not N. separately, the objection of extra-parochiality was not sustained.—*R. v. 153. —[The parish of St. G. was created, under 10 Anne, c. 11, a parish for ecclesiastical purposes only, but for the relief of the poor & other parochial purposes it continued to form part of the parish of St. A., from which it had been severed. In various local Acts respecting these parishes they were spoken of as united parishes, & at the passing of Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), the laws for the administration of relief to the poor were vested in a board of fifty guardians elected from the two parishes jointly; but neither of these parishes had ever maintained their poor separately:—Held: these parishes were not a union incorporated for the relief of the poor under any local Act, & therefore, the Poor Law Comrs. might join them to a union under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 26, without the consent of two-thirds of the existing guardians, as required in certain cases by sect. 32.—*R. v. 155. —Consent of guardians of union.—[Under the Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), the Local Government Board has power to dissolve any union, whether formed under a general or a local Act. The consent of the guardians of a union is not required to the uniting of a parish with other parishes under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 64. The consent required concerns only the guardians of the parish, where there are such guardians.—LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD v. SOUTH STONEHAM UNION, [1909] A. C. 57; 78 L. J. K. B. 124; 99 L. 156. Union of unions.—[One union of parishes formed under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, cannot unite with another such union, so that there shall be a joint occupation of one poorhouse for the paupers of two unions.

The union of A. was formed under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, & the union of B. was afterwards similarly formed. The latter union not having any poorhouse, arranged with union A. that its paupers should be received into the workhouse of union A., & the charges & expenses of maintenance be paid by union B. The workhouse was enlarged to afford this additional accommodation, & union B. was charged with the interest upon the money borrowed. The auditor of the district, in auditing the accounts of one of the townships in union B., disallowed certain items as paid to the treasurer of union A., on account of the paupers of the said parish & the before-mentioned debt:—Held: he was right in his disallowance, for the arrangement between the two unions was unlawful.—*R. v. He had, previously to the dissolution, been employed to conduct proceedings on behalf of the guardians under Lands Clauses Act, to obtain compensation in respect of lands within the union taken by a railway, & was to be paid for these services. The Poor Law Board in assessing the compensation to which he was entitled [under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1867 (c. 106), s. 20] for the loss of his office or employment took into consideration the profits so made by him, in addition to his salary:

158. ———]—The parish of M. was managed by trustees under a local Act. On Jan. 1, 1856, Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), came into operation. By sect. 90 all the powers of the trustees, except such duties as relate to the affairs of the church or the management or relief of the poor, ceased, & were transferred to the vestry. The trustees continued as a body, having the management & relief of the poor. In Feb. the trustees resolved that after Lady Day, 1857, the business of the board should be conducted by one clerk, with the aid of a solr., & that the office of solr. be offered to S., who accepted the offer. On the passing of the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867 (c. 6), the poor law board, under sect. 73, directed that after July 7, 1867, the relief of the poor in the parish of M. should be managed by a board of guardians elected according to the Poor Law Acts. By sect. 74 the guardians are subject to the same regulations as the guardians elected under the Poor Law Acts. By sect. 76 officers & persons appointed or acting under any such local Act for any purpose of the relief of the poor, or otherwise in the service of the guardians . . . shall be entitled to continue in office after the constitution of the new board of guardians under this Act to the same extent as if this Act had not been passed, & their service before the constitution of that board shall be reckoned in the computation of any superannuation allowance to which they may become entitled. Provided that in any case any officer of a union or a parish shall be deprived of his office by reason of the operation of this Act, the poor law board may award to him such compensation for the loss of his office & its emoluments, either by way of gross sum or by way of annuity, as to them shall seem reasonable. The board of guardians continued the appointment of S. as solr., but the poor law board having refused to sanction it, as not being authorised by sect. 74, the board of guardians gave S. notice that his appointment would be determined on Sept. 29, 1867:—Held: S. held an office within Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867 (c. 6); & he had been deprived of his office by the operation of that Act, & was entitled to compensation.—*R. v. 159. ——— What officers entitled—Solicitor.]

—A local Act, by which a poor law union & a rural district were dissolved, provided that any officer of the guardians or rural district council who should be in office at the commencement of the Act, & who by virtue thereof should suffer direct pecuniary loss, should be deemed to be an officer entitled to compensation within Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), s. 120, & that that sect. should apply accordingly. By sect. 100 of that Act the expression "office" includes "any place, situation or employment," & the expression "officer" is to be construed accordingly.

A firm of solrs. were during a period of about twenty-six years next before the commencement of the Act from time to time employed by the board of guardians of the union & the rural district council to do such legal work as those bodies required to have done, receiving by way of remuneration for that work the usual professional costs & charges payable to solrs. for such work; & during that period no other solr. was employed by the board of guardians or council:—Held: the solrs. so employed could not be considered as officers of or as holding any "place, situation or employment" under the board of guardians or rural district council within Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41), ss. 100, 120.—Re CARPENTER & BRISTOL CORPN., [1907] 2 K. 160. ——— Effect of dissolution.]—In replevin for taking goods in the workhouse of the W. Union, against the guardians of C., incorporated by a local Act, defts. avowed as landlords for rent in arrear, & the tenancy was put in issue by a plea in bar. It appeared in evidence that by an order of the Poor Law Comrs., made on Sept. 16, 1835, which purported to be founded on the consent of two-thirds of the guardians of C., such union was ordered to be dissolved; & on Sept. 17 another order of the Comrs. was made under the provisions of the Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), that the parishes comprised in the union of C. should, together with others, be formed into the union of W. From the date of the latter order the guardians of the W. Union used the union house formerly belonging to the C. Union for the poor of their union, & payments expressed to be for rent had been made by the guardians of the W. Union to the treasurer of the C. Union until Sept. 1838, when the payments were made generally, but receipts were given by the treasurer as for rent. On that day a sum of money was paid by the W. Union to the C. Union as a balance for the furniture, etc., in the workhouse. In Jan. 1841, the Poor Law Comrs. made an order, which recited that the premises in question had, under the order of Sept. 17, become convertible to the use of the W. Union, & had since been used & occupied by the poor of such union, & directed the guardians of the W. Union to pay to the treasurer of the C. Union a yearly rent as compensation for the use of the premises. This order appeared to have been acted on by both parties:—Held: (1) p'tfs. were not estopped, by having sued defts. as a corpn., from giving in evidence the order of Sept. 16, 1835; (2) the effect of that order was not ipso facto to dissolve the incorporation for all purposes; (3) this order was admissible in evidence, without proof of the consent of two-thirds of the guardians of the C. Union, as that corpn. had since ceased to perform the duty of providing for & taking care of the poor, & a jury might rightly presume that it operated as a valid dissolution; (4) supposing upon the dissolution of the C. Union the property in the workhouse was diverted from it, of which quaere, yet that if the guardians of W. had contracted with them as owners expressly or impliedly, the mere want of legal ownership would not take away their right to distrain; (5) under the circumstances the occupation of the workhouse by the W. Union must be referred to the order of the Comrs., which must be presumed to have been communicated to the C. Union, & not to any contract creating the relation of landlord & tenant between the parties.—WOODBRIDGE UNION v. COLNELS UNION (1849), 13 Q. B. 269; 18 L. J. Q. B. 126; 12 L. T. O. S. 421; 13 J. On a claim by the union from which the transfer had been made for an adjustment, under Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 68, of the property, debts, & liabilities affected by the transfer:—Held: any such adjustment must be made between the two unions, & not between the union from which the transfer had been made & the area transferred.—Re ROCHDALE UNION & HASLINGDEN UNION, [1899] 1 Q. 165. ——— Increase of burden on ratepayers—Evidence.]—By a Provisional Order, confirmed by 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. xxxvi, the city of B. extended its municipal boundaries, & a new Poor Law area was created. Certain unions & parishes were amalgamated to form the new Birmingham union, & certain parishes which did not lie within the boundaries as extended were transferred to the T., M. & Br. unions.

By art. 2, of a Provisional Order of 1912, confirmed by 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. lxii, it was provided that "On any adjustment made otherwise than by agreement for the purpose of the Order, or of the confirming Act, under sect. 32 or sect. 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888, or either of those sects. as modified or adapted by the order, provisions shall be made for the payment to any council or other authority affected by the order of such a sum as seems equitable in accordance with the rules contained in the first schedule to this order in respect of any increase of burden which will probably be thrown on the ratepayers of the area of that council or other authority in meeting the cost incurred by that council or other authority in the execution of any of their powers & duties in consequence of any alteration of boundaries affected by the order, or other change in relation to which the adjustment takes place."

Rule 1 of the first schedule of the order provided that: "Regard shall be had to—(a) The difference between the burden on the ratepayers which will properly be incurred by the council or other authority affected by the order in meeting the cost of executing any of their powers & duties, & the burden on the ratepayers which would properly have been incurred by that council or other authority in meeting such cost had no alteration of boundaries or other change taken place."

An arbitrator appointed to adjust financial relations between the new B. Union on the one hand & the T., M., & Br. Unions on the other gave the new B. Union no compensation for any alleged increase of burden in respect of their loss of the transferred parishes. In determining what was equitable, he was, in accordance with the above-mentioned schedule, to have regard to the difference between the burden on the ratepayers of the new B. union, which would properly be incurred by the union in meeting the cost of executing any of their powers & duties & the burden on these ratepayers which would have properly been incurred by the new B. Union in meeting such costs had no alteration of boundaries taken place. The new B. Union provided as their sole evidence for the arbitrator, evidence as to the amount which the parishes severed from the unions, now amalgamated as the new B. Union, contributed before the amalgamation to the unions of which they then formed part, & they contended that, whatever the expenditure of the new B. Union it would have been less by this contribution had the several parishes still formed part of the new union. The arbitrator held that this evidence alone did not enable him to decide the question asked, as the amalgamation of unions would probably create great economies in administration; & he awarded that the new B. Union were not entitled to have provision made for the payment to them of any sum under art. 2 of the said order of 1912:—Held: the arbitrator was right.—*BIRMINGHAM UNION v. The order did not purport to affect the boundaries of the Unions:—Held: the whole of parish S., as enlarged by the order, was comprised within the union of Whitehaven.—*BOOTLE UNION v. On motion for a certiorari, upon the ground that one of the parishes of the union already had a workhouse, which might be altered to suit the purpose, the ct. refused the rule, & would not inquire into the soundness of the discretion exercised by the comrs.—*Re NEWPORT UNION, R. v. 168. — Consent of majority of guardians necessary.]—Where, by order of the Poor Law Comrs., under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 39, guardians are appointed to administer the poor law in a single parish, the consent to an order for building a workhouse in such parish, under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 23, must be given by a majority of the guardians, as it is, in the case of a union, under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 38; & not by a majority of the ratepayers. When the Poor Law Comrs., under the privilege given by Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 106, show cause in the first instance against a motion for a certiorari, & succeed, the ct. will grant them costs, if proper ground appear for it, though the general rule of practice is that a party showing cause in the first instance shall not have costs.—*R. v. 169. What constitutes workhouse—Cottages let by parish at undervalue—To tenants occasionally receiving relief.]—Eight cottages were erected by the parish of W., for the better lodging the impotent & other poor, partly by means of benefactions, & partly by a fund raised under an enclosure act, according to which such fund was to be applied to the relief of the poor, & accounted for as rates. The cottages were repaired out of the poor rate. Four of these cottages were always let, at a rent under their value, to industrious labourers: these tenants paid no poor rates, & occasionally received relief; but at the time of their being admitted were likely to pay the rent, which was always collected.—Held: these four cottages were not workhouses for the purposes of Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), Union & Parish Property Act, 1835 (c. 69).—CANTRELL v. WINDSOR UNION (1838), 4 Bing. N. C. 348; 1 Arn. 133; 5 Scott, 716; 7 L. J. M. C. 77; 132 E. R. 822.

170. Alteration & enlargement of workhouse—Authorised by statute—Discretion of guardians as to nature of alterations.]—Where, under an Act of Parliament, the parties to whom powers are delegated confine themselves within the limits prescribed them, this ct. will not interfere. be judicious or not. The principle on which the ct. interferes in the cases of railway cos. & other like bodies. Right of comrs. under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), to alter & enlarge a parish workhouse, for the purposes of the union in which that parish is situate.

171. — Guardians must submit plans & estimates—If required by authority.]—If guardians of the poor of a parish, when about to enlarge or rebuild their workhouse in execution of powers given them by a local Act, are required by the Poor Law Comrs. to submit the plans & estimates to them, & refuse to do so, the comrs. may, under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), ss. 15, 21, make an order forbidding them to proceed in any alteration or addition to such workhouse, or apply, raise or borrow any money for that purpose, till the plans & estimates be submitted to & approved by the Comrs.—*R. v. 177. ———.—[Charitable use.]—By a lease, dated 1747, after reciting that the inhabitants of the parish of G. had resolved to build a workhouse for the better reception & employment of the poor of the parish, & had applied to the lessor for a lease of the land, demised, & that the lessor, "in order to encourage so good a work," had consented to grant the lease, a piece of land was demised for a term of a hundred & fifty years, to commence from a day fifteen days later than the date of the lease, at the yearly rent of 1s., to several persons, one of whom was the vicar of G., in trust that the lessees might build a workhouse upon the land "for the better reception & employment, & for the lodging & entertainment only of all the poor people of the parish of G., for the time being during the said term, in such manner as they, or the major part of them, shall think fit, at the proper costs & charges of the inhabitants of the said parish of G., or otherwise, & not to be let, mortgaged for money, or assigned, to any other use, intent or purpose whatsoever." It was agreed that, if the inhabitants should discontinue the prescribed use of the building so to be erected, & should be willing to deliver it to the landlord, it should be lawful for them to do so, he paying to the churchwardens or overseers of the parish

the then value of the building. The deed was not enrolled under Charitable Uses Act, 1736 (c. 36). A workhouse was duly erected on the demised land pursuant to the lease. In 1862 the workhouse being no longer required, was pulled down, & no rent having been paid under the lease since 1776, the site was conveyed to a purchaser in fee under Union & Parish Property Act, 1835 (c. 69), enabling parish authorities to sell the sites of disused workhouses. An action having been brought by a person claiming to be the reversioner against persons—as alleged assigns of the lease—claiming under the purchase of 1862, to recover the arrears of rent:—Held: the lease was a lease for "charitable uses"; it failed to comply with the requirements of Charitable Uses Act, 1736 (c. 36), in that, besides non-enrolment, it did not take effect in possession, & contained reservations in favour of the grantor in the shape of rent, & something in the nature of a right of pre-emption: these defects were not cured by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 73, that Act curing only one defect, namely, want of enrolment: & the lease was accordingly void ab initio, & Stat. Limitations began to run against the grantor, if not from the execution of the lease, at all events from the time the rent ceased to be paid:—Semle: land acquired by parish officers to enable them to perform their statutory obligations, as for instance, by providing a workhouse, is land acquired for a "charitable use."—WEBSTER v. if they choose, obtain work which will enable them to maintain themselves, their wives & families, but who, by reason of a strike or otherwise, refuse to accept that work, are not entitled to relief, except that, if they become physically incapable of working, the guardians may, to prevent their starving, give them temporary relief. But in that case the guardians ought to prosecute them under Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 3, as "idle & disorderly persons." The wives & children of such men, however, are entitled to relief, though they themselves are not. Semble: men who are prevented from accepting work by fear of physical violence are entitled to relief.

(2) A general strike of workmen does not of itself create a case of "sudden & urgent necessity" within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 54.

(3) The High Ct. has jurisdiction to restrain guardians from applying the poor rates improperly. But this jurisdiction does not interfere with the power of the Local Government Board under Poor Law Audit Act, 1848 (c. 91), s. 4, to remit improper payments by guardians which have been disallowed by the auditor.

Pltfs. claimed an injunction to restrain defts. from applying the rates in the relief of able-bodied men who could have obtained work, but who refused to accept it, & also a declaration of the illegality of such an application of the rates. At the trial of the action pltfs. did not ask for an injunction:—Held: the ct. had jurisdiction, & ought to make a declaration that any payment out of the rates for setting to work or for the relief of able-bodied men who could at the time obtain & perform work at wages sufficient to support themselves & their wives & families, if any, was unlawful & ought to be disallowed by the auditor of the guardians' accounts; but the declaration was not to include relief given to or for the wives & children of such men, & was in no way to affect the power of the Local Government Board to remit such disallowed payments, although unlawfully made, under any statute enabling them to do so.—*A.-G. v. 190. ———.]—A board of guardians deliberately made unlawful payments of poor relief to able-bodied strikers, & when invited by some ratepayers to admit liability & to submit to a surcharge they refused to make any admission, & an action was brought by the A.-G. against the guardians on the relation of ratepayers for a declaration that the payments were unlawful. After action brought the district auditor, on his audit, which the relators attended, surcharged the amounts on some of the guardians. At the trial defts. admitted the illegality but contended that as the relators had adopted the alternative procedure of asking the auditor to make a surcharge there was no case for a declaration:—Held: as defts. had before action refused to make any admission the action was, at the date of the writ, fully justified, & the fact of the audit did not affect the form of the order which the ct. had power to make, but, as defts. by their counsel admitted the illegality, the order of the ct. would be prefaced with a statement of such admission & would be that defts. must pay the costs of the action.—A.-G. v. BERMONDSEY UNION (1924), 40 T. L. R. 512.

191. ——— Availability of work for all men.]—The guardians of a poor law union during a strike paid relief to able-bodied men although work was available for them at wages sufficient to support them & their wives & families, & an action was brought by the A.-G., on the relation of certain ratepayers, for a declaration that the payments were unlawful & ought to be disallowed by the auditor of defts.'s accounts. Defts. contended (a) that the matter was one purely for the auditor, (b) that, as a large number of men in the district obtained, in normal times, only casual work, it could not be said of any one man in receipt of relief that he could have obtained work, (c) that, as a large number of persons were deprived of unemployment insurance benefits because the stoppage of work was due to a trade dispute, the payments were lawful, & (d) that as the men were prevented by terrorism from seeking work no work was available for them:—Held: (1) the powers of the auditor did not oust the jurisdiction of the ct., & the principle laid down in A.-G. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union, No. 188, ante, namely, that if guardians gave outdoor relief to able-bodied men for whom work was available the guardians were doing an illegal act, was applicable generally, whether all the men could or could not have obtained work at a particular time; (2) the legislation as to unemployment insurance did not affect the principle; (3) on the evidence, terrorism did not make it impossible for the men to continue work; & therefore plff. was entitled to the declaration claimed.—*A.-G. v. accident which disabled her, & which required immediate medical assistance. The constable of that parish improperly removed her to her own, which was the adjoining parish, & sent for the surgeon of that parish to attend her:—Held: it was the duty of the parish officers of A. to have taken the pauper to the nearest convenient house in A., & to have provided medical attendance there, & they could not, by improperly removing her to another parish, relieve themselves from the liability which the law had, in the first instance, cast upon them, & they were therefore liable to pay the surgeon's bill.—*TOMLINSON v. Therefore, where a woman left a parcel containing a child at the hospital, but went away before the contents were ascertained, & was not again found, & the governors, acting in conformity with their rules, refused to receive it:—Held: on such refusal, found as a fact by the jury, on trial of a mandamus, under the judge's direction, the parish of St. Pancras, within the ambit of which the hospital is, was bound to maintain the child as casual poor.—*R. v. 210. Whether guardians entitled to recover—At common law—Removal of lunatic to workhouse.—A person suffering from delirium tremens became violent in his own house, used threats & broke the windows & furniture; a relieving officer of the union was sent for who ordered his removal to the workhouse where he was kept for some days. He was then examined by a doctor & brought before the magistrates as a lunatic, but as the magistrates held that he was not a lunatic he was discharged. Certain expenses were incurred by the guardians in respect of these services:—Held: apart from the Lunacy Acts, there was a common law liability upon such person to repay to the guardians the expenses so incurred, & the guardians therefore could recover such money as necessities expended by them.—WEST HAM UNION v. PEARSON (1890), 62 L. T. 638; 54 J. P. 645.

211. — Guardians acting in discharge of statutory duty—Necessaries supplied to infant.—The rule that, where necessities are supplied to a person who from any disability cannot himself contract, the law implies an obligation to pay for them out of his property extends to the case of an infant pauper supported by guardians in discharge of their statutory duty. This liability is not cut down by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1849 (c. 103), s. 16, which gives special means of recovering one year's maintenance; & the guardians can therefore recover six years' arrears of moneys expended for the maintenance of an infant pauper.—Re CLABBON, [1904] 2 Ch. 465; 73 L. 212. — Common law obligation of pauper to repay.—A pauper who had been maintained in the workhouse by the guardians in discharge of their statutory duty can be sued by the guardians under their common law right for the expenses of his maintenance in the workhouse, & the guardians can recover up to the amount of six years' arrears of such maintenance. The liability of the pauper to repay the guardians depends, not upon any supposed or implied contract, but upon the obligation imposed upon the pauper at common law to refund to the guardians the amount expended by them in his maintenance if he has sufficient funds to enable him to do so, & this common law right of the guardians to recover six years' arrears of maintenance is not taken away or in any way affected by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1849 (c. 103), s. 16, which gives special means of recovering one year's maintenance from the pauper.—BIRKENHEAD UNION v. BROOKES (1906), 95 L. T. 359; 70 J. P. 406; 22 T. L. R. 583; 50 Sol. Jo. 514; 4 L. G. R. 988, D. C.

213. — — — — —.—A pauper who has been maintained by the guardians of a poor law union in their infirmary is liable to pay to the guardians a reasonable sum for the necessities supplied to him. Such necessities include not only a reasonable sum for the food, clothing, drugs, coal, gas, & water supplied, but also a reasonable sum in respect of the pauper's share of the establishment expenses incurred for the purpose of keeping up the infirmary as a place of residence for the paupers, such as the salaries of the officers of the infirmary & their rations & uniforms if supplied as part of the terms of their service, the cost of the furniture, of the painting, repairs, & insurance of the building, of timber & other building materials, & the cleaning of windows, the wages of certain workmen employed therein, a sum for printing & stationery, & the parochial rates payable in respect of the infirmary, & also a sum in respect of the capital cost of the site & building.—*ST. 217. — Whether husband or father a "pauper"—Maintenance of wife & children.]—A man named B. was convicted for allowing his wife & children to be chargeable to the K. poor law union. He became entitled under the trusts of a will to a share of the residuary estate. The guardians of the union took out a summons in the Ch. Div. against the trustees of the will & B. claiming a declaration that the guardians were entitled to a charge on B.'s share of the residuary estate to reimburse them for the expenses of maintenance of B.'s wife & children:—Held: a charge was not created on the share of the residuary estate by the operation of Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1849 (c. 103), s. 16; (2) although by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 56, relief given to or on account of the wife or child or children under the age of sixteen years not being blind or deaf & dumb, "shall be considered as given to the husband of such wife or to the father of such child or children," this does not make the husband or father a "pauper" within Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1849 (c. 103), s. 16.—*Re BENSON, KNARESBOROUGH UNION v. The lunatic was entitled to property producing about £8 per annum. By an order in lunacy a receiver was appointed of this income of the lunatic, & was directed to apply the same in & for the maintenance & benefit of the lunatic. Pursuant to this order the receiver paid the income to the guardians from 1887 to 1903 for the maintenance of the lunatic, & the guardians in their books appropriated each payment of the receiver as a payment on account of the arrears of maintenance due to them at the date of each payment. At the death of the lunatic considerable arrears of maintenance were due to the guardians, & in an action by them against the administratrix of the lunatic for these arrears the administratrix contended that the guardians were only entitled to six years' arrears prior to the date of the writ:—Held: under the circumstances the payment by the receiver took the case out of Stat. Limitations, & the guardians were entitled to payment of all the arrears due to them.

There was not at any time a separate account kept in respect of the lunatic's estate. Pltf. took out letters of administration in 1902. 231. —Where married again.]—A woman & her second husband became chargeable to a parish, & received from it a weekly sum as outdoor relief, which was paid to the husband:—Held: the children of the woman by a former husband were liable under Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), s. 7, to relieve & maintain her, & therefore to contribute towards such relief for her maintenance, & that their liability was not affected by Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1834 (c. 76), s. 56, enacting that all relief to a wife shall be considered as given to her husband.—*ARROWSMITH v. maintain his lawful children, notwithstanding that, on the children becoming chargeable, the father may, at the suggestion of the guardians of the poor, & in order to avoid proceedings, have entered into a deed of separation from his wife, & covenanted thereby to pay her a certain weekly sum towards the maintenance of the children; & the guardians are not thereby debarred from subsequently taking proceedings to enforce his statutory liability.—WESTMINSTER UNION v. BUCKLE (1897), 61 J. P. 247, D. C.

238. Son over sixteen—Effect of domicile.]—A pauper of the age of twenty-four years, was found destitute in the parish of D. in Scotland. That parish relieved him & under Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1845 (c. 83), s. 71, claimed & received repayment of the cost of that relief from the plffs. the authorities of a Scottish parish in which the pauper had a legal settlement. Subsequently the pauper was found destitute & insane in the parish of A., also in Scotland. That parish, having caused him to be examined & certified as a lunatic & removed to a asylum, recovered repayment of the expenses of so doing from pltf. under Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857 (c. 71), s. 76. Plffs. thenceforward paid for the maintenance of the lunatic in the asylum under Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857 (c. 71), s. 77. The lunatic was the son of a domiciled Englishman. On the death of the father leaving assets the plffs. claimed to recover from defts. as his exors. the sums which they had respectively paid to the parishes of D. & A. & the expenses of the lunatic's maintenance in the asylum, as being money which they had been compelled to pay & which the father had been legally compellable to pay. By Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1845 (c. 83), s. 71, a parish relieving a pauper may recover the cost of relief from his parents or other persons who may be bound to maintain him. By the common law of Scotland a parent is legally bound to provide his children up to any age with the necessary means of subsistence. It is assumed in Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857 (c. 71), ss. 77, 78, though not directly enacted, that the expense of the examination, removal, & maintenance of a lunatic may be recovered from the lunatic's relations:—Held: even assuming that the statutes applied to a parent or relation who was a domiciled Englishman, & the latter statute conferred a right on the parish of settlement to recover from a relation where legally liable apart from that statute the liability of the parent or relation must be determined by the law of his domicile; by English law a father is not liable for the maintenance of his adult son in the absence of an order of justices under Poor Relief Act, 1601 (c. 2), & defts. were consequently under no liability to plffs.—*COLDINGHAM PARISH COUNCIL v. Wife deserted by former husband—Bigamy.]—The guardians having applied for an order on D., the husband, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, to contribute towards the relief of his wife, it was proved that she had married a former husband in 1840; he left her in 1845, she then received a letter that he had died in a ship on a voyage abroad, but she had not been able to trace the exact truth. She married D. in 1849, & the former husband had not been heard of since then:—Held: the justices were justified on such evidence in assuming that D. was her lawful husband, & in making an order upon him accordingly.—DEAKIN v. DEAKIN (1869), 33 J. P. 805.

249. Necessity for proof of marriage.]—In proceedings by guardians of a parish or union against a husband under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, for enforcing relief of his wife who has become chargeable, it is not necessary to give strict evidence of the marriage, & cohabitation is good prima facie evidence of the marriage as in civil actions against a husband for the wife's debts.—STARGOT v. WESTBURY UNION (1873), 37 J. P. 695.

250. Lunatic wife—Holding protection order.]—Justices at the petty sessions refused an application by appts. to make an order, under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1850 (c. 101), s. 5, upon resp. to maintain or contribute toward the maintenance of his wife, who was a lunatic chargeable to appts. union, on the ground that a protection order, which she had obtained under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 21, & which had not been discharged, absolved him from such liability. Upon a case stated:—Held: in the circumstances, resp was liable, & the justices were wrong.—OXFORD UNION v. BARTON (1875), 33 L. T. 375; 30 J. P. 725, D. C.

251. Wife leaving husband on reasonable grounds.]—A man having been summoned under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, it appeared that his wife had left him sixteen years before on account of his ill-usage, from the effects of which she was still suffering; & she had lately received parish relief, & was still chargeable. The husband had not contributed to her support during the separation, but had applied to her to return to cohabitation. At the hearing he offered to receive her back at his house, & promised not to ill-use her. But she refused to return on account of the brutality she had previously received. The justices were satisfied by evidence that it was dangerous to the health of the wife to return to cohabitation; & they made an order on the husband to pay a weekly sum towards the relief of the wife:—Held: the order was rightly made, notwithstanding the husband's offer, as the justices had found in effect, which was a question for them, that the wife was justified in leaving & refusing to return to the husband's house.—THOMAS v. ALSOP (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 151; 39 L. J. M. C. 43; 21 L. T. 715; 34 J. P. 580; 18 W. R. 454.

Y.:—Held: the magistrate was wrong in granting such order without first deciding whether her refusal to return to Y. was reasonable.—FORDHAM v. YOUNG (1888), 53 J. P. 133; sub nom. R. v. FORDHAM, 5 T. L. R. 27, D. C.

253. ——Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, provides that where guardians of a union have granted relief to a married woman who requires relief, they may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union, & the justices may summon the husband to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife. The duty of the justices, on the hearing of such summons, is not merely ministerial, but judicial, namely, to investigate the facts & form their own opinion as to whether the wife is in "need" of relief, apart from any conclusion arrived at by the guardians. Where, therefore, guardians granted relief to a wife on her representation that her husband had refused & neglected to maintain her, & they summoned the husband before a stipendiary magistrate to show cause why he, the husband, should not maintain her, & the magistrate, after hearing the evidence, found as a fact that the wife did not require relief in the sense of needing it, because, although the husband was able & willing to maintain her, she had acted unreasonably in refusing to live with him, & the magistrate accordingly dismissed the summons:—Held: there was evidence to support the findings of the magistrate, & he had properly exercised his jurisdiction.—RICHTARDS v. COLEMAN (1918), 88 L. J. K. B. 813; 83 J. P. 133; 63 Sol. Jo. 193; 17 L. G. R. 166, D. C.

254. — Lunacy after desertion.]—Where a wife leaves her husband without justification his obligation to support her is, except where she has been guilty of adultery, not put an end to, but only suspended so long as she continues wilfully to absent herself, & if during her absence she becomes a lunatic then, as she is no longer capable of volition, her continued absence is not wilful, & her husband's liability to maintain her will revive.—JONES v. NEWTOWN & LLANIDLOES UNION, [1920] 3 K. B. 381; 89 L. J. K. B. 1161; 124 L. T. 23; 84 J. P. 237; 36 T. L. R. 758; 18 L. G. R. 481, D. C.

I do not see the distinction attempted between the parish & an individual supplying necessities. If the husband is not obliged to answer for the wife's contracts, or to receive her into his house, it cannot be said that he is "legally bound to maintain her" (LITTLEDALE, J.).—*R. v. Subsequently applt.'s wife became chargeable to the guardians of the poor, & applt. was summoned under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, to show cause why an order should not be made against him to maintain his wife. At the hearing of this summons the wife admitted that the order of rescission had been made on the ground of her adultery, but she denied that she had in fact committed adultery; & the justices being of opinion that they were not bound in law by the decision of fact of another ct. of co-ordinate jurisdiction as to the alleged adultery of the wife, held that applt. was liable to contribute to his wife's support, & they made an order against him for a weekly payment:—Held: the justices were not entitled to disregard the order rescinding the order for maintenance, & the order for a weekly payment must be set aside.—*SELBY v. 259. — Form of order.—An order of two justices, founded on Poor Relief Act, 1718 (c. 8), for providing for the families of absconding men out of their estates, should state how much of the goods or rents of the fugitive should be seized by the parish officers; & the subsequent order of confirmation by the sessions should specify the quantum of relief to be appropriated out of the goods & rents so seized, & limit a period for such appropriation; supposing such prospective order to be good, & that the order is not to be confined to the discharge of expenses already incurred by the parish. Qu.: if the original order be defective in the particular mentioned, whether the sessions can make it good by an order of confirmation directing the parish officers "to receive £7 16s. rent of the rents & profits, etc., towards the discharge of the parish for providing for the party's wife," etc. But, at any rate, a payment of one sum of £7 16s. is a sufficient compliance with such order on the only ground of construction on which it can be supported. The tenant in whose hands the rent was seized cannot justify, in covenant by his landlord for rent in arrear, the retaining a second sum of £7 16s. out of the second year's rent, upon the supposition that such order of sessions extended to enable the parish officers to receive so much annually out of the rents; for in that view the order would be bad in law upon the face of it, as an indefinite order for the annual payment of such a sum, without any limitation of time, or until further order, etc.—STABLE v. DIXON (1805), 6 East, 163; 2 Smith, K. B. 278; 1 Bott. 410; 102 E. R. 1249.

260. Discretion of justices as to amount of relief.—It is not a condition precedent to the power of justices under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33, to order the husband to pay for the maintenance of his pauper wife, that the guardians should have fixed the sum for her relief. Therefore, although the guardians have not fixed any sum for her future relief, but have given her a small weekly sum, the justices may, under sect. 33, order the husband to pay for her maintenance such weekly sum as, considering the condition of the husband & all the circumstances, may be proper, although it may exceed the amount of the relief previously given to her by the guardians.—DINNING v. SOUTH SHIELDS UNION (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 25; 53 L. J. M. C. 90; 50 L. T. 446; 48 J. P. 708, C. A.

261. Existence of maintenance order against husband—Whether a bar to proceedings by guardians—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39).—Where a wife has obtained a maintenance order against her husband under above Act, & he has ceased to make any payments under the order & his wife has subsequently become chargeable to the union, the mere fact of the existence of a maintenance order which the husband is no longer obeying does not disentitle the guardians to obtain an order against him under Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1868 (c. 122), s. 33.—BIRMINGHAM UNION v. TIMMINS, [1918] 2 K. B. 189; 87 L. J. K. B. 1096; 119 L. T. 146; 82 J. P. 279; 16 L. G. R. 625, D. C.

262. Husband acting in bonâ fide belief in absence of liability.—When resp. was contributing to the maintenance of his wife in a lunatic asylum, her relatives, during his absence on military service, & without consulting him, obtained her release on giving an undertaking under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 79, that she should be no longer chargeable to any union & should be properly taken care of. Resp. afterwards declined to maintain his wife on the ground that he was relieved from his obligation by her relatives, having taken the responsibility upon themselves. Ultimately she became chargeable to the union, & on a summons against him for wilful neglect to maintain her, whereby she became so chargeable, the justices held that he was not guilty of wilful neglect, inasmuch as he acted in the bonâ fide belief that he was relieved from his obligation, & they dismissed the summons:—Held: resp.'s belief, being erroneous, was immaterial, & the justices ought to have convicted.—*ROBERTS v. 1894 (c. 73), & whether or not there was originally jurisdiction to insert in the order the provision dealing with pauper settlements, sect. 42 of the Act of 1894, applied, & no objection to the legality of the order could be entertained, more than six months having elapsed since its confirmation by the Local Government Board.—*R. v. The pauper had resided in that portion that became the parish of W.

In 1902, by a provisional order made by the Local Government Board & duly confirmed by a statute, the parish of W., part of the parish of B., together with other parishes, were amalgamated to form the new parish of W., & it provided that “for all purposes of settlement & removal residence prior to the commencement of this order in any part of the existing parishes of B., H., W., T., or W., shall have been deemed to have been residence in the parish in which the part is included by this order”:—Held: the settlement of the pauper in the old parish of B. having been destroyed in 1894, it was not revived by the order of 1902, & the pauper had not acquired a settlement in the new parish of W.—*PRESTON UNION v. So held on the authority of decided cases. This has not been altered by Union Changeability Act, 1865 (c. 79), as that Act, in referring to an order of removal of a pauper settled in any parish, applies only to a parish actually existing for the purposes of settlement at the time when the order of removal is made.—STOURBRIDGE UNION v. 309. — Settlement by hiring & service.]—

A parish consisted of eight townships. Overseers were appointed annually, sometimes one for each township, sometimes one for two or more townships & others for the rest, & sometimes four for the whole district. There were churchwardens for the whole parish. An equal poor rate was always agreed to, at a general parish vestry, by the churchwardens & overseers; & the rate of allowances to paupers was settled at such vestries. Separate poor rates were made, allowed & published, & the money collected by the overseers in the townships for which they acted, & paid by them to the poor of their districts respectively. Those who had a surplus brought it to the parish vestry, & it was applied in aid of those who were deficient; if any balance remained, it was placed to the general account, & handed to the new overseers for the next year's expenses. In 1833, under a mandamus, the townships were divided, & became entirely separate in the appointment of overseers & management of the poor. Pauper, in 1815, gained a settlement by hiring & service; everything which conferred the settlement taking place in G., one of the above townships. From 1815 to 1844 she received relief from G., while residing elsewhere. On appeal against an order made in 1844, removing her to G., the sessions quashed the order subject to a case raising the question whether, on the above facts, the pauper was settled in G.:—Held: the settlement gained in 1815 did not confer a settlement in the newly separated district of G., & relief given by G. was only evidence, on which the judgment of the sessions was conclusive. Order of sessions confirmed: though the notice of grounds of appeal was signed only by the overseers of G., & not by the churchwardens of the parish in which the eight districts lay, & the sufficiency of the signature was a question submitted in the case.—R. v. ## SUB-SECT. 2.—RESTRICTION ON DERIVATIVE SETTLEMENTS.

See, now, Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 110.

317. Restriction of doctrine—General statement of restriction.]—(1) After Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), came into operation a pauper's father acquired a settlement in Penge, & his wife & child thereupon took his settlement & never acquired any subsequent settlement in their own right. The pauper's mother was born in Reigate, which was her maiden settlement. After the father's death, an order was made adjudging the last legal settlement of the pauper, then under the age of sixteen, to be in Penge:—Held: under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, the widow did not upon her husband's death revert to her maiden settlement, & the pauper upon her father's death did not take the maiden settlement of her widowed mother, but retained her father's settlement in Penge & the order was right.

(2) A pauper was born in 1861 at her father's birthplace in Wanborough. He died in 1868,

& his widow married again. After her father's death, the pauper, who was always physically incapable of work, resided with her mother in Rhydgwern without receiving relief till June, 1880, when she became chargeable. In June, 1880, the pauper had so resided at Rhydgwern for more than three years since Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), came into operation (Aug. 15, 1876); viz. more than one year before she attained the age of sixteen (Oct. 1877) & more than two years after attaining that age. An order having been made adjudging the last legal settlement of the pauper to be in Wanborough:—Held: the order was wrong; the pauper had by her residence under the age of sixteen coupled with her residence over that age "resided for the term of three years" in Rhydgwern so as to render her irremovable within sect. 34 of the Act & had therefore acquired a statutory settlement in that parish; & this result was not affected by the provisions of sect. 35.

(3) A pauper resided with her husband in a parish for more than three years continuously, & after his death continued to reside as a widow in the same parish for three months:—Held: the settlement of the pauper & her children, who were all under six years of age was in that parish, not on the ground that the pauper had acquired a settlement in her own right under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, but on the ground that the husband had at the time of his death acquired a settlement in the parish under sect. 34 & his widow & children took that settlement under sect. 35.

(4) The object of the enactment was to impose a limit upon parentage settlements by double derivation. . . . The provisions of the clause [Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (3)] have, in my opinion, no application to children under the age of sixteen (LORD WATSON).—*REIGATE UNION v. himself, & there was no evidence of his having derived a settlement from his father. The widow, who was the mother of the five children, had no other settlement than that acquired by her marriage with M., & had acquired none since. None of the children were born in Liverpool. The children were all under the age of sixteen:—Held: the mother & the children took M.'s birth settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, & therefore were settled in Liverpool.

(2) The enactment seems to me to mean that if there is a child without a settlement & unmarried, or married without having acquired a settlement through her husband, because he never had one, & the settlement of the child cannot be found out without inquiring into the derivative settlement of the father—that is, without going back a step in the pedigree beyond the father—the legislative cuts it short, & says, you shall not go back that step & inquire into the derivative settlement of the father (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.).—*LIVERPOOL UNION v. If any child in this sect. mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or being a female shall not have acquired a settlement from her husband, & it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he or she was born:—Held: the wife of a man who had while under the age of sixteen & before the passing of Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), derived a settlement from his father, took this derivative settlement of her husband, & not his birth settlement; for the settlement which a son while under the age of sixteen derives from his father is excluded from the operation of the sect. so far as it abolishes derivative settlements.—*GREAT YARMOUTH v. 321. ————.]—Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (1), which abolishes derivative settlements, except in the case of a wife from her husband, & of a child under the age of sixteen from its parent, is to be read retrospectively as well as prospectively, both in the enacting part & in the exception.

A pauper born in 1841 had while under the age of sixteen & before the passing of Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), derived a settlement from his father who had acquired a settlement by estate, & the pauper never acquired any settlement of his own:—Held: though the enacting part of Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (1), would, but for the exception, have destroyed the derivative settlement, the case fell within the exception, & the pauper therefore retained the derivative settlement after the Act.—*WESTBURY-ON-SEVERN v. 322. ————.]—A pauper, born in 1840, in appt. union, had never acquired a settlement in her own right. The pauper's father was born in the L. union, & he had never acquired a settlement elsewhere:—Held: Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, was retrospective in its operation & therefore the pauper at the age of sixteen acquired her father's settlement, which was a birth settlement, & could be ascertained without inquiry into his derivative settlement.—*HEREFORD UNION v. 323. ————.]—The wife of A. left her husband who had been residing with her in a parish in appt. union, & was settled therein, & went to live with another man in another union. In different parishes therein she gave birth to the paupers, three children, one legitimate & the others illegitimate. Eventually she & the children came to & resided for more than twelve months in resp. union, when she deserted them, & they became chargeable to that union. The latter obtained an order adjudging the settlement of all three children to be in the above parish in appt. union, all three being under sixteen years of age. The wife was never deserted by her husband:—Held: (1) as regards the legitimate child, his settlement was that of his father in the above parish in appt. union, his derivative settlement being preserved under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, & he was not irremovable from resp. union under the proviso to Poor Removal Act, 1848 (c. 111), s. 1, because his father, who had never resided in resp. union, had, consequently, not acquired a status of irremovability therein; (2) as regards the illegitimate children, inasmuch as they took the settlement of their mother under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (2), which under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (1), remained derivatively that of the father, their place of settlement could not be shown without inquiring into the derivative settlement of the mother, & consequently, under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (3), they must be deemed to be settled in the parish in which they were respectively born, neither of which was in appt. union.

The children having become chargeable to the parish while under sixteen & during their father's lifetime :—Held : the children took the settlement of their father, & since it could not be shown what settlement he derived from his father without inquiring into the derivative settlement of his father, the children must be taken to be settled in the parish in which their father was born.—BATH UNION v. On appeal, the Div. Ct. held that the pauper, being more than sixteen years old at the time of the inquiry as to her settlement, could not within Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, be deemed to have derived a settlement from her father, & therefore took her birth settlement. In July, 1914, the mother of the pauper went to reside in the parish of Ross, in the Ross union, where she remained until Nov. 1915, when she married a man who had acquired a settlement in that parish, & who never acquired a subsequent settlement. In May, 1920, an order was made adjudging that the pauper's settlement was in the parish of his birth & ordering his removal to applt. union. Upon appeal to quarter sessions the order was quashed :—Held : inasmuch as under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35 (3), the settlement of the pauper's mother, being derived from her husband, could not be inquired into, the pauper must be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he was born, & the removal order was therefore properly made.

396. —.]—(1) The mother in her widowhood may gain a settlement for the children under seven years of age.

(2) There is no distinction between the settlement of children with the father or mother, for they are as much hers as the father's, & nature obliges her as much as the father, to provide for them; so does the law & every argument that holds for their settlement with the father, holds as to their settlement with the mother.

The reason why children shall not gain a settlement where the wife gains a settlement only by intermarriage, is because it is not her family, but her husband's, & she cannot give the children any sustenance without the husband's leave.

Since she is equally punishable with her husband for deserting her children, & therefore could not leave them behind her, they must gain a settlement with her (PARKER, C.J.).—*ST. GEORGE PARISH v. 436. ———.]—An illegitimate child under the age of sixteen can acquire an independent settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.

An order of justices adjudged the pauper, an illegitimate child, aged about two years, to be settled in the West Ham union. E., the mother of the pauper, herself an illegitimate child, M. C., the mother of E., & A. C., who married M. C. after the birth of E., all resided together in the parish of West Ham, in the West Ham union, for three years, in such a manner & under such circumstances in each of such years as would, in accordance with the several statutes in that behalf, render them irremovable. During the whole period of such residence E. was under the age of sixteen years:—Held: (1) E., although under the age of sixteen years, had acquired an independent status of irremovability, & consequently under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, was deemed to be settled in the parish of West Ham; (2) the pauper took the settlement of his mother, E., under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, & the order of justices must stand.—WEST HAM UNION v. 466. — Of sister of pauper—Supported by evidence of marriage of parents & baptism of children.]—For the purpose of showing a birth settlement in C., a witness was called who proved that she was the sister of the pauper's mother, who was the witness's senior by ten years; that the witness first remembered herself & the pauper's mother living with their parents in C. It was also proved that the father & mother of the pauper's mother were married in C., & that the witness afore-mentioned, the pauper's mother, & another sister, were baptised in C.:—Held: sufficient evidence.—*R. v. His attestation paper stated that he said he was born in C. parish. There was no corroboration of the fact of the pauper's birth in C.:—Held: the attestation paper was not prima facie evidence, & the result being that the settlement could not be ascertained, the justices ought to have made an order on the county under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), s. 290.—*CHERTSEY UNION v. ### SECT. 5.—SETTLEMENT BY RESIDENCE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Poor Law Act, 1927 (c. 14), s. 111.

469. What amounts to residence—Residence not in ordinary place of abode.]—To constitute a residence, within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, as amended by Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 1, it is not necessary that the residence should be in a house or ordinary place of abode.

A woman, after sixteen years' residence in resp. parish, was compelled by poverty to sell her furniture, & give up her lodgings. Being destitute, she wandered about the parish in the daytime, & slept for twenty-one nights in a refuge for the homeless poor situate in an adjoining parish, returning to the respondent parish by day:—Held: no break of residence.—R. v. ST. LEONARD, SHOREDITCH (INHABITANTS) (1865), L. R. 1 Q. B. 21; 6 B. & S. 784; 35 L. J. M. C. 48; 13 L. T. 278; 29 J. P. 728; 14 W. R. 55; 122 E. R. 1382; sub nom. *ST. 470. — Constructive residence.]—Though not bodily present, a person may be constructively resident in a parish, but that is only when the prima facie presumption arising from absence is rebutted, & in order to rebut it the party who seeks to do so must give some evidence for that purpose (COLERIDGE, J.).—R. v. MANCHESTER OVERSEERS (1857), 29 L. T. O. S. 247; 21 J. P. 436; 4 Jur. N. S. 9.

471. — Occasional visits—Seaman staying with parent between voyages.]—A pauper, who was born in applt. union, from 1876 up to the time of his application for relief was a sailor in the merchant navy, serving on board different ships & on different voyages. Between the different voyages he always returned to his mother's house in resp. union, remaining there on an average for four or five weeks in each year. In 1881 he also obtained jobs on shore which lasted about three months, during which time he came to his mother's house in resp. union, from Saturday to Monday in each week. When away he invariably left some of his clothes & other belongings at her house, & also brought to her a portion of his earnings as a contribution towards the expenses of the house, but he had no separate bedroom or bed there. In 1853 the pauper became afflicted with blindness, returned to his mother's house, & then sought parish relief. The justices made an order that he was settled in applt. union, & directed that he should be removed there:—Held: the justices were right in holding that the pauper had not a residence, & therefore had not acquired a settlement in resp. union, & had not become irremovable from there, & he was settled in applt. union.—R. v. STEPNEY UNION (1884), 54 L. J. M. C. 12; 52 L. T. 959; 49 J. P. 164; 1 T. L. R. 144, C. A.; affg. S. C. sub nom. MERTHYR TYDVIL UNION v. STEPNEY UNION, 53 L. J. M. C. 183.

472. — Married woman living apart from husband—Constructive desertion.]—A married woman, after being turned out of her husband's house for adultery, resided for more than three years with another man in resps. union in such a manner as would, if she were a widow, render her exempt from removal, the husband's settlement being in applts. union:—Held: the woman was irremovable under Poor Removal Act, 1861 (c. 55), s. 3, having been for the purpose of this sect. deserted by her husband; she had therefore acquired a settlement by residence in resps. union under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—*R. v. 474. ——— Desertion not proved.]—A husband & wife lived together in one parish from 1901 to 1906. In 1906 the husband took lodgings for his wife & children in the parish of C. in appts.' union, the husband contributing to their support, but not living there. The wife & three children resided continuously in that parish until the end of 1913, when she & her children went to reside in a place in resps.' union, & a few months afterwards they all became chargeable to resps.' union, the children being under the age of sixteen. Upon an application by resps.' union to remove the wife & children to appts.' union it was found as a fact that the husband had not deserted his wife & quarter sessions held that, as the wife had not been deserted, she had not acquired a settlement in appts.' union but that the children had, & they ordered the removal of the children to that union:—Held: the wife not being a deserted wife & the inference being that the husband had a settlement elsewhere neither the wife nor the children had, during their residence in the parish on appts.' union, acquired the status of irremovability in that parish, & therefore had not acquired a settlement in appts.' union & the children were not removable to that union.—*HAMBLETON UNION v. 480. “Pauper removed” — Pauper at time Act passed.]—Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, gives a settlement in a parish by three years' continuous residence therein; & Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 36, provides that “the provisions relating to settlement shall not apply to any pauper removed under any order or removal . . . before the passing of this Act”:—Held: these words in Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 36, “any pauper removed,” applied only to a person who was a pauper at the time the Act was passed & so long as he remained a pauper; & therefore, they did not operate to deprive of the benefit of Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, a person who had been removed under an order of removal in 1866, but who was not a pauper at the time the Act was passed, & who had resided continuously in one parish from 1870 to 1881.—*BRIGHTON PARISH UNION v. 482. What amounts to break—Infirmity nurse—Sent on duty to branch establishment.—The pauper was employed from Nov. 1873, to July, 1878, as an indoor resident nurse at an infirmary in M. She was under the authority of the lady superintendent of nurses in the infirmary, & was bound by the terms of her agreement to undertake any duties that might be assigned to her either as a hospital or a private nurse. For five months in 1876, & for three months in 1877, she acted, under the orders of the lady superintendent, as a nurse at a branch establishment out of M., returning to the infirmary as soon as her duties ceased at the branch establishment. During this absence her wages were paid from the head institution at M., & the greater part of her effects during the first period of absence was left behind her in her box in the dormitory at the infirmary, to which place she went from time to time for change of clothing as required:—Held: the absence of the pauper for the two periods did not amount to a break of residence, & she had gained a settlement in M. by three years' residence within Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—*MANCHESTER OVERSEERS v. During his absence she removed from the parish in which they were residing at the time of his going to sea to lodgings in another parish, where he joined her on his return:—Held: in the absence of evidence that the lodgings were taken by the husband's directions, the husband could not be treated as constructively resident there while he was at sea, & the period that elapsed between his wife's removal there & his return could not be computed as part of a three years' residence by him in the parish so as to confer upon him a settlement in the parish under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—WEST HAM UNION v. CARDIFF UNION, [1895] 1 Q. B. 766; 64 L. J. M. C. 167; 72 L. T. 497; 59 J. P. 343; 43 W. R. 424; 39 Sol. Jo. 384; 15 R. 378, D. C.

In such case the two separate periods of residence before his departure & after his return cannot be added together for the purpose of making up the three years' residence necessary to confer a settlement under that section, although the time during which a person is serving as a soldier is by Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, to be excluded from the computation of the time for the purposes of that sect.—*NEWARK UNION v. 490. Relief received after settlement acquired.]—L., a pauper, was born in 1810, in applt. union, & in 1865, went to reside in the G. union, where he continued to live till 1877. In 1869, after the pauper had acquired a status of irremovability in G. for upwards of three years, he met with an accident, & from that time till 1877 received relief from the G. union. In 1877 the pauper went to reside in the resp. union, & shortly afterwards became chargeable there. On Oct. 6, an order for his removal to applt. union was made by justices, & was confirmed on appeal by the sessions, subject to a special case:—Held: the order of removal was wrongly made to applt. union, inasmuch as the pauper had acquired a settlement in G. union, under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, by virtue of his residence there.—R. v. In Jan. 1876, the pauper received relief from the M. union while residing there, & so continued until 1879, when the pauper went to the A. union, & was removed to the M. union. The removing justices had no corroboration of pauper's residence, but quarter sessions received such corroborative evidence:—Held: the quarter sessions rightly received the corroborative evidence, but were wrong in holding that pauper had not acquired a settlement by residence in M. union, though residence without relief ceased before Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—R. v. 492. What amounts to relief—Residence in charitable home.]—A pauper had resided for upwards of three years in a building in the parish of F., occupied as a home or reformatory for women. This home was supported by money collected at church offertories without the parish, & by annual subscriptions & donations from persons resident in all parts of the kingdom, the money being applied in providing for the supervision, instruction, maintenance, & clothing of the inmates. The pauper during the whole term paid no money for her maintenance & clothing:—Held: the money collected for her maintenance in the home was a "bona fide charitable gift," & she had not been maintained by a rate or subscription raised in a parish in which she did not reside, within the meaning of the proviso to Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & she was irremovable from & settled within the parish of F., under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34.—FULHAM UNION v. Upon an appeal from an order of removal to applt.' union:—Held: Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, para. 1, refers only to derived settlements; there was nothing in Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 35, to prevent the pauper from acquiring a settlement under Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34; & therefore 498. ——— Proof of intention that children should return.—Upon appeal to quarter sessions from an order of the justices adjudging that two pauper children under sixteen years of age were settled in a parish within the Holborn Union, in which their father had a settlement at the time of his death, it appeared that seven years before the order the children, then under seven years old, were on the death of their mother placed by their father in the care of K. & his wife, who resided at Chertsey within the Chertsey Union, & lived with them from that time continuously until they became chargeable. After they went to Chertsey the children were visited by their father on three occasions only, & then only for a few hours at a time, but he made a weekly payment for their maintenance which was continued to his death:—Held: there was evidence on which the justices might find, as they must be taken to have done, that the father had never given up the intention that his children should return to him when he was in a position to receive them.—HOLBORN UNION v. 499. ——— A pauper, nearly fourteen years old, went into domestic service in the parish of L. in the West Ham Union, remained there nearly four years, left before she became eighteen & resided outside that union with her mother. The pauper's father died when she was two years old. The widowed mother never resided in or acquired a status of irremovability from or a settlement in that union:—Held: upon the true construction of Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1, & Poor Removal Act, 1848 (c. 111), s. 1, & Divided Parishes & Poor Law (Amendment) Act, 1876 (c. 61), s. 34, the pauper had not resided for the term of three years in the parish of L. in such manner & under such circumstances in each of such years as would in accordance with the statutes in that behalf render her irremovable, & she had not therefore acquired a settlement in the West Ham Union.—WEST HAM UNION v. 500. ——— Residence in convalescent home.—In Sept. 1896, E., being then about five years of age, was sent to a convalescent home for children situate in the parish of P., which parish was subsequently amalgamated with others to form the parish of B., in the C. union. E. remained at the home till Jan. 1901.

The children received in the home were of delicate health & came for fresh air treatment. There were about fourteen in the home at any one time, & they remained for periods varying from one month to five years. Two nurses were attached to the home, & a doctor called once a week to see if any children required attention. The children were sent to the home by various charitable institutions, who made payments to the proprietor for their maintenance.

Inquiries had been made with respect to the parents of E., but the parents could not be traced:—Held: (1) E. had not acquired a settlement in the parish of B. in the C. union; (2) the convalescent home was a "hospital" within Poor Removal Act, 1846 (c. 66), s. 1.—CHRISTCHURCH UNION v. For at all events this power is given to a body constituted of more than two persons; though it may be executed by the major part of the body when well constituted. The indenture was executed by the parish officers & W. P. was a farmer & tenant to W., who was a stocking weaver. J. never served P., but lived with W. long enough to gain a settlement by apprenticeship, if he could acquire one by such service. 523. Fraudulent contract of apprenticeship—Parish apprentice.]—The parish officers of A. bound a pauper apprentice to his grandfather, who was described as a butcher. Indentures were executed with the sanction of two justices. The grandfather in fact did not carry on the trade of a butcher, but he & the mother colluded together, & fraudulently imposed him on the justices & the parish officers as a proper master for the pauper :—Held: there having been no fraud in the parish officers the pauper gained a settlement by serving under this indenture.—R. v. GREAT SHEEPY, LEICESTER (INHABITANTS) (1828), 8 B. & C. 74; 2 Man. & Ry. K. B. 286; 1 Man. & Ry. M. C. 252; 6 L. J. O. S. M. C. 75; 108 E. R. 970.

The indenture was allowed by the two county justices, but no notice was given to the overseers of the poor of the parish in the borough of the intention to bind such apprentice, nor did they or any of them attend before the county justices who allowed the indenture, & admit such notice:—Held: by Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), the indenture was void for want of such notice, & the pauper did not gain any settlement by serving under it.—*R. v. 539. Sufficiency of evidence—Indenture lost.]—Where, in the absence of the usual proof in support of a settlement by apprenticeship, it appeared that the pauper, when a boy, had lived for three years with his master, & then ran away; that twenty years since a fire had happened in the apartment in which the pauper's father lived, & destroyed every thing he had; that the father & mother of the pauper were both dead; that the pauper's master, & the wife of the latter, were also dead; that the master had left no property at his decease, & that no relatives of his were to be found; that a fellow apprentice of the pauper had seen in his master's hand an indenture, which he understood to be the indenture of apprenticeship of the pauper; & that after the pauper had left his master's service he married, & the parish in which he was supposed to have served as an apprentice relieved his wife by receiving her into the workhouse:—Held: this was sufficient evidence to warrant the sessions in presuming a legal binding & service as an apprentice, so as to confer a settlement.—R. v. St. MARY-LE-BONE INHABITANTS (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 475; 2 Dow. & Ry. M. C. 325.

540. ———.]—On objection, stated in grounds of appeal, that "no copy of an order of removal has been sent," applts. cannot allege that the copy sent is defective & inaccurate in not setting out the name of one of the paupers. In an examination, after loss of an indenture of apprenticeship & sufficient search had been shown, the following evidence was given: "In or about May, 1831, the pauper was, by his own consent, his father & mother being dead, bound by indenture of apprenticeship, bearing date," etc., "which was duly stamped & executed," to serve, etc. "as an apprentice, for the term of six years then next following. I saw the indenture executed":—Held: sufficient to prove a binding as apprentice.—R. v. St. ANNE'S, WESTMINSTER (INHABITANTS) (1847), 8 Q. B. 561; 2 New Mag. Cas. 75; 2 New Sess. Cas. 517; 16 L. J. M. C. 33; 8 L. T. O. S. 338; 11 J. P. 167; 11 Jur. 124; 115 E. R. 986.

541. Admissibility of extrinsic evidence—Inaccurate description in indenture.]—To prove the settlement by apprenticeship of Joseph Beaumont, an indenture was put in, dated, & purporting to be between Joseph Roberds, of one part, & John Beaumont of the other. It was very inaccurately worded, & spelt. It witnessed "that the said John Beaumont hath, of his own free will, & with the consent of & by his father's John Beaumont, has put & bound himself apprentice to & with the said Joseph Roberds, & with him after the manner of an apprentice to dwell, remain & serve, from the date hereof, for, during & until the term of his attain ages twenty-one thence next following be fully completed & ended";

during which term "the said apprentice his said master shall serve," etc. "The said Joseph Roberds" doth covenant with "the said Joseph Beaumont, apprentice," to teach him, etc., to pay him 3s. "yearly & every year during his apprenticeship," & to allow him two weeks to go to school, "yearly & every year during his apprenticeship." "In witness whereof, the parties above named to these present indentures have set their hands & seals." At the bottom, followed "Joseph (L.S.) Roberts. Joseph (L.S.) Beaumont." Joseph Beaumont gave evidence that he was bound by the above indenture, & served under it:—Held: (1) it appeared from the deed that the John Beaumont, party thereto, was the Joseph Beaumont therein named apprentice. (2) Extrinsic evidence might be given that the person so meant was the pauper, & he had executed the indenture. (3) The meaning of the parties sufficiently appeared to be that the apprentice should be bound until he attained the age of twenty-one. (4) This, combined with the date of the indenture, might by extrinsic evidence of the pauper's age be made sufficiently certain as to the term for which he became bound. (5) The sessions, upon the above evidence, were justified in finding a settlement by apprenticeship.—R. v. WOOLDALE (INHABITANTS) (1844), 6 Q. B. 549; 1 New Sess. Cas. 377; 14 L. J. M. C. 13; 4 L. 552. —[G. was bound apprentice to a cork cutter in parish B., to serve him for seven years. After serving for seven weeks in that parish, the apprentice having a weakness in his eyes, his master told him to go back to his father, & it was afterwards agreed that the master should give the pauper two gross of corks per week, of the value of 2s., to maintain him; he went & lived with his father in parish K. for two years, during which time he received the corks from his master & sold them, & slept more than forty nights at his father's house in K., but did no work for his master. At the expiration of two years, in consequence of the master giving him bad corks, he was taken back to the master in B., with whom he lived ten days, & during that time he went out hawking corks for sale for his master. He then went home again, his master agreeing to let him have a gross of the best corks per week, which he did, & the apprentice disposed of them as before, doing no work for the master, & residing in K. with his father till his indentures were discharged by an order of two justices:—Held: the apprentice being maintained by his master in K. in pursuance of the indenture, resided there as apprentice, & gained a settlement.—*R. v. 553. —[Apprentice assigned to another.—Return to first master's parish.]—A pauper was duly apprenticed to a farmer residing in parish A., & served him there, but before the expiration of the apprenticeship, the farmer, having failed in business, placed the pauper with another farmer in parish B., & the pauper served the latter in B. for nine months, when becoming ill & disabled from service, he returned to his first master in parish A. The latter, having no accommodation for him, told him to go to his mother, who lived in that parish. The pauper did so, & his first master, a few days after, promised his mother to remunerate her for taking care of the pauper. The pauper continued to reside with his mother in A. for about eight weeks, his first master also being resident there, but did not perform any actual service for him:—Held: the pauper resided in A. in the character of apprentice, & thereby gained a settlement in that parish.—*R. v. 554. —[Apprentice performing same service.—Though work illegal.]—A pauper, apprenticed to a carpenter in parish S., being disabled by an accident from working in his business, was taken by his master to his, the apprentice's, father's house in parish M. for the benefit of surgical attendance. He resided there forty days, & during such residence was employed by his master to sell tickets in a lottery in which the prizes were articles manufactured by the master, & was allowed by him 1s. on each ticket sold, in aid of his maintenance:—Held: he gained a settlement in M., although the sale of such tickets was illegal.—*R. v. 555. Residence at school—[With approval of master.]—Where a master mariner, having no immediate occasion for his apprentice's service, the vessel being then in dock, offered either to turn him over to another master for a time, or to let him go back to school, & the apprentice said he would go back to school & learn navigation; & accordingly did so, & resided above forty days there:—Held: such residence was not a residence under the indentures, & he did not thereby gain a settlement.—*R. v. third persons—Permanent staff of militia.]—A parish apprentice & his master being both on the permanent staff of the local militia, in consequence of that circumstance resided together with his master, & continued to serve him in the parish of B. for forty days:—Held: this residence was sufficient, & he thereby acquired a settlement in B., notwithstanding they were both under the control of their superior officers during the whole time.—R. v. CHELMSFORD (INHABITANTS) (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 411; 106 E. R. 713.

557. Residence at home during part of year—Under terms of apprenticeship deed—Sea apprentice.]—By an indenture of apprenticeship it was stipulated, that the master should provide meat, etc. during the term, except in the winter seasons, when the ship to which the apprentice belonged should be laid by unrigged; during which time the apprentice was to be maintained by himself or friends, the master paying a compensation. Under this stipulation, the apprentice, during the winter, resided with his parents in the township of B. for more than forty days, not doing any work for his master during such residence:—Held: this was not a residence under the indenture, & conferred no settlement.—R. v. BROTON (INHABITANTS) (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 84; 106 E. R. 869.

558. Residence elsewhere by indulgence of master.]—An apprentice bound for seven years to A., served him in his house between five & six years, & afterwards, for the remainder of the term, resided in his mother's house, having agreed with his master that he should be at liberty to work for whom he pleased, he paying 2s. per week to his master. The master also, during this time, occasionally gave him work, for which he was not paid:—Held: this was not a continuance of the service to A. for seven years under the indenture.—R. v. INMAN (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 55; 106 E. R. 858.

560. Residence after agreement to dissolve apprenticeship—Before payment of money.]—A boy bound out by a parish as an apprentice in husbandry, till he should be twenty-one years of age, served the master, first in husbandry & afterwards as a miner. He then left his master, & went to live with his own father, who was a miner, & worked with his father at the same mine at which he had worked with his master. The master afterwards agreed with the father that the apprentice should remain with the father, & the indenture be given up on a subsequent day, upon the payment of a sum of money. On the day appointed, which was before the passing of Parish Apprentices Act, 1816 (c. 139), the money was paid, & the indenture given up to the father. The son was then under age. He worked with the father as a miner till his majority, when the indenture was given up to him by his father. From his first coming to his father, the father had received his wages, & maintained him:—Held: even supposing the parties to have had power to dissolve the apprenticeship, & to have intended to do so, it was not dissolved till the money was paid; & a residence of forty days between the making of the agreement & the payment of the money, was a residence under the apprenticeship, & conferred a settlement.—*R. v. 590. —.—[The pauper, an apprentice, being about to marry, told his master that he wished to provide & work for himself, to which the master consented, & said he might do the best he could for himself; but nothing was said about the indentures, & they were not in fact delivered up or cancelled; the pauper afterwards engaged to work with another master, who told the original master that he had got the pauper at work, to which the original master answered, "I am glad of it, he was a bad lad, & I could make nothing of him":—Held: this was not such a consent to the particular service as would confer a settlement in the parish where the pauper then lived with the second master.—R. v. ST. HELEN, STONEGATE (INHABITANTS) (1801), 1 East, 285; 102 E. R. 110.

592. —.—[The master of several apprentices, upon his quitting business, proposed to assign all his apprentices, without mentioning either their names or number, to S., but no assignment was ever made; the pauper, one of the apprentices, was afterwards hired by S. as a servant for fifty-one weeks; & her former master, on meeting her, expressed his approbation of her having gone into the service of S.; the sessions having found that there was not a particular assent of the original master to the second service, & therefore the relation of master & apprentice never subsisted between S. & the pauper, this ct. thought the sessions well warranted in that conclusion.—R. v. ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH (INHABITANTS) (1817), 1 B. & Ald. 116; 106 E. R. 43.

593. Giving character.]—Giving a character to an apprentice is a constructive assent to his service with the party applying for it.—R. v. ST. MARY, LAMBETH (INHABITANTS) (1785), Cald. Mag. Cas. 533; 4 Doug. K. B. 329; 99 E. R. 906.
